The Conspicuous Consumer

by Mopsy Strange Kennedy

Resourceful Papers

Papers, in this case, include versions of paper you may have never seen or imagined; it might be truer to describe them as a slightly frailer version of fabric. The 1,000 papers they sell here include handmade Oriental, Egyptian, South American, Indian, and European. These styles are thicker and crunchier than ordinary paper and come in an array of colors, designs, and textures. The owners cite the two-fold mission of the store: their products are intended to be both wacky and elegant. The papers cry out for aesthetic projects: bookbinding, original invitations, decorative ventures of all sorts (someone who works here made a wallet out of paper you'd think was skinny leather). Some are sold in sheets in the manner of cloth. But Paper Source also sells interesting handmade smaller papers and stationery sets in government refund-check brown, charcoal, flecked gray, and in marbled styles. Beautiful wrapping papers that might live on to paper a dollhouse wall or stripe the slats in a chair are available. Twisty ropes of raffia coiling around the store, woven abaca that looks like fine burlap, and other ribbons in a silky mesh make you want to wrap and enfold well, almost anything. Their other major line is rubber stamps, a huge, ever-burgeoning array of them; funny ones, exotic ones, and stamps of animals, including a fascinatingly sinister tabby cat. The intended marriage, of course, is between the tempting stamps and the equally tempting papers, and workshops will be given from time to time in extending that union creatively.

Men At Work, Therapeutically Speaking

Following in the format of women's groups, and in fact honoring their spirit, psychologist Jack Sternbach will be offering a series of men's group-retreat weekends on the Vineyard in the fall and winter. Sternbach, who calls himself a "minimalist group leader," has a talent for helping, for letting happen, for simply setting the stage for a remarkably intimate flow among the men in his groups. He is a believer in the idea that men have a need and a capacity for connectedness, a contemporary cry of the women's movement that Sternbach respectfully adapts to what he sees as the particular needs of men. Since, as he believes, modern day men often tilt toward the poles of aggression, or else toward a passive, retreatist position, his groups promote, specifically, a less-aggressive, not so character-armored attitude, and one that works against distancing. "Old ways of being masculine don't work," he says, "They make men anxious, and then they can lose themselves, lose their families and even their lives. But I believe men can tap into a deeper potential for caring about each other, into more authenticity, that can carry over to other relationships." Men in crisis, or those simply looking for "growth" can, as he puts it, rise to the challenges being offered them. All walks come to his groups, including men in blue collar jobs (and as there are many stripes of blue collar these days, including academics-become-carpenters, the mix is rich indeed). Other, more specific weekends include fathers-and-sons, men in recovery, and, in October, a weekend for male therapists. Cost is $250 plus $125 for food and lodgings. Call for more information.

The Importance Of Writing Ernest

Amid the slavish Hemingway-ites of Key West – academics, biographers, latter-day Lost Generation drifters, would-be writers in the mode of terse, nostalgic toughness – there is one especially salty loon who calls himself not Poppa, but Pappy. In the extremely witty, though underlyingly tormented novel I Killed Hemingway, by William McCranor Henderson, the Pappy character not only alleges to have been the person who wrote Hemingway's works but also makes the claim to have eventually murdered him, driven to it by betrayal and bitterness. The narrator of the story, Elliott McGuire, a played-out Hemingway scholar himself, takes on the task of ghostwriting Pappy's memoirs in a scammy deal which becomes ever more convoluted, riotous and ruinous, as the wheezing geezer reveals himself to be seriously cooked. Themes of authenticity versus plagiarism, of the real truth chafing against various slippery fictive versions of the "truth," are played out extravagantly; the 20s come to a seedy, boozy, highly entertaining redux in the present. Henderson (author of Stark Raving Elvis) conjures up a cast of wild characters that he views askance through a long skinny 30 degree angle of irony. The writing is lusciously funny and, as in a mystery, the tension of what-finally-happened stays springy to the last page.

10 Constructive Criticism

The bad news: the boom busted We're broke. The good? So are the developers. Fred Atherton surveys the wreckage deposited on Boston's skyline by the Trumpian '80's and concludes there's hope for the future as the Hub builds up its image.

25 Last Call of the Wild at Spasso

The Queen of the Night, ventures into the quiet-eatery-by-day, raging-scammery-by-night Spasso to reveal a top secret: Thursday nights. " On Thursday nights, the hordes descend on Spasso like sharks on bait." Find out why.

WHAT'S HOT IN BOSTON NOW

CIRCUS

Cirque Du Soleil, "Saltimbanco." Sept. 9 through 19. The internationally acclaimed French Canadian theatrical circus, Cirque Du Soleil, is arriving in Boston for the first time this fall to raise the big-top on the Fan Pier next to the World Trade Center Boston Thousands are sure to be thrilled by diverse performances such as the "Elastics" aerial act, a combination of bungee-jumping and ballet, and the world famous contortion performances of the Tchelnokov family. For tickets call the Cirque du Soleil box office at (617) 426-0611, or Ticketmaster at 931-2000.

MOVIES

The Man Without a Face. Directed by Mel Gibson. Based on the novel by Isabelle Holland, Mel Gibson stepped behind the camera for the first time to direct this Warner Bros. release that charts the growth of an extraordinary friendship. Newcomer Nick Stahl is a solitary student attempting to pass the entrance exam to his recently deceased father's alma mater and enlists the help of an equally reclusive ex-teacher portrayed by Gibson. Both characters share tragic pasts that eventually work to bring them together.

RECORDINGS

John Mellencamp Human Wheels. The first single release, "What If I Came Knocking?", is already in the top ten and, though everyone in the Mellen camp is surely hoping for the album to follow, some fans may wonder if Mellencamp has fallen into a lack luster rut. Due in stores early September.

Stone Temple Pilots EP Even if they do sound too much like Pearl Jam, their debut album remains near the top of the charts and shows no signs of losing steam. Though shorter than a full length release, the follow-up effort, tentatively titled, "EP", is sure to draw thousands of fans to their local record stores. Due in stores September 7.

CONCERT

Rod Stewart Great Woods, September 17/18. For two nights only, Great Woods hosts another of rock's inscrutable artists. Having betrayed his talent for years, Rod Stewart has come back into the spotlight with a top selling MTV "Unplugged" CD, a happy marriage, and a future that's brighter than ever. Like many of his contemporaries, Stewart will perform hits from the past and present. Call 931-2000 to get your tickets well in advance.

BOOKS

Streets of Laredo. Larry McMurtry. (Simon and Shuster, $25.00) From the author of The Last Picture Show and Terms of Endearment comes the sequel to his 1985 epic Lonesome Dove. Captain Woodrow F. Call is back as an aging bounty hunter contracted to bring in one of the last true outlaws of the American Frontier, who in the course of his travels, meets up with the likes of true life criminals such as John Wesley Hardin (the guy who "once shot a man, just for snorin' too loud!) Fans of the first novel or the mini-series also get the further adventures of Lorena Wood and the wily corporal Pea-Eye.

VIDEO

Mad Dog and Glory. Directed by John McNaughton. Martin Scorsese produced this first rate comedy that is currently drawing more attention as a home video release than its first run at the theaters. Conventional casting trends seem inverted as De Niro plays the introverted cop and Bill Murray portrays the manipulative hoodlum. The pair become fast friends through a series of misadventures but soon head for eventual conflict when a young woman enters the picture.

TEMPLE LIPPIZANS

Ritz-Carlton Boston Jumper Classic. Sept. 12. Riding enthusiasts won't want to miss the world famous Temple Lippizans performing the elegant art of Classical Dressage at the opening ceremonies and intermission of the 1993 Jumper Classic, at the Fox Hollow Farm in Hamilton, MA. The main attraction will turn heads as well as top riders compete on a specially designed course of challenging jumps. Children under five watch for free while general admission is only $15.00 for adults. Order in advance and call Ticket Pro at 1-800-828-7080.

Constructive Criticism

After watching their skyline go boom, Bostonians can (finally) look up to a better future.

By Fred Atherton

So, we don't have jobs. So, the Armani's getting a bit threadbare and the last sushi we had was wrestled from a sea gull. The market crashed, the boom busted. We're broke. But look on the bright side: the developers are too. The conventional wisdom of American developers has long been that the vital city pushes ever upward and outward, and nowhere was this more true than in the Boston of the 1980s. Victorian low-rises and rolling pastures were simply obsolete—nothing got the Reagan-era Bostonian's adrenaline pumping like the thought of a few hundred-thousand new square feet of office or retail space rising in their stead. Healthy vitality? For a tumor, certainly.

ONE INTERNATIONAL PLACE: "I want it tall like a lipstick and pink like a powder puff."

There was a time when Boston had the unkempt congeniality of an eccentric but sporadically brilliant maiden aunt: one who pulled rare gifts from the mysterious depths of her tweeds—things you never knew you wanted until they glittered in your hand. Rising out of a uniform landscape of low red brick and brownstone, gilt domes and granite pinnacles danced across the skyline, and tiny green parks nestled in the bosom of countless neighborhoods. Boston basked in apparently eternal Indian summer: the literary and architectural triumphs of the past century reigned unchallenged well into the second half of this one. Henry James's proper Bostonian would recognize Cleveland Amory's in an instant.

Boston had languished in genteel poverty for decades, making Yankee virtue out of an inability to afford large new buildings in that the old ones suited quite as well, thank you . Various rich suitors, the Prudential, and the federal urban-renewal types, came bearing gaudy trinkets, but these were so soon seen as embarrassing that they remain to this day moldering where they were dropped. Our heads remained unturned, although the irritating consequences of these one-night stands persist like herpes. Through the seventies, when Bostonians built for themselves, the results were predictably conservative: functional black or brown filing cabinets in which to conduct business — so nondescript, they practically disappear.

The great rule-proving exception is the shimmering mirage of the Hancock tower. For all the trouble its construction caused, this building has earned its place on our skyline by virtue of its self-effacing grace and perfect, paradoxical form. No one who has watched its moods shift with the weather— witnessing the sunbeams it focuses and bends over Back Bay at dawn or seen the lights it shines through an evening fog like a Whistler nocturne—can deny that a Boston without the Hancock would now be unthinkable. It is extravagant in its restraint, slightly mystical, even transcendent. What could be more fitting for the city of Emerson and Santayana, Gibran, and Mrs. Gardner?

But then, close on the heels of this great success, the old girl jumped the rails. In a move unprecedented in 300 years, our beloved maiden aunt went out on a bender like a Revere housewife who just won Megabucks. Today, slumped amid the wreckage, we can begin to assess the damage.

The first major sign of trouble rose in a Band-Aid-colored blob between the Copley Plaza Hotel and Huntington Avenue. Copley Place was a tentative step down the slippery slope to Trumpian abandon: a facade as bland and tasteless as yesterday's porridge concealed Boston's first marble-lined galleria mall à la Houston.

Copley Place is not entirely without virtue. The surface application of glitz cannot quite conceal the admirable planning and engineering that allows the complex to straddle the Pike extension, rail lines, and busy city streets. High above the clamoring mall, the office atrium even has a clean futurist charm reminiscent of the old sci-fi film The Shape of Things to Come.

THE GENZYME FACTORY: The best new building in Boston, no matter what the Globe says.

What is unforgivable, however, given Copley Place's proximity to H.H. Richardson's Trinity Church and McKim, Mead & White's Public Library, is that this thoroughly banal building repeats the fatal mistake of the Prudential Center in an infinitely more sensitive position. The building denies the street. ALL the action is hermetically sealed inside, an interminable flight up from ground level. Unlike the boutique mecca of Newbury Street, which provides an endless lively pageant of shoppers and strollers in public space, Copley Place sucks tourists and consumers off the street into a removed, rigidly controlled, private domain without giving back so much as a handsome front or a bit of public sculpture to the square (the Horses of Famine on Dartmouth Street most decidedly does not count).

Because the complex is ringed by six-lane roads and highway ramps, it would have been difficult to ask the developers and architects to provide retail or restaurant space opening directly onto Huntington or Dartmouth. Something with a bit more curb appeal, however, could certainly have been offered: smaller curtain-wall elements (bricks or tiles rather than slabs the size of a tractor-trailer) and a finer pattern of windows or even blind niches would give some link to the scale of Copley Square's other buildings. The building is as antiurban and unfriendly as a space station or its close cousin, the suburban mall.

Copley Place was but the thin end of the wedge. Two other placeless "Places" went up in its wake that haven't a single redeeming feature between them: Lafayette Place and International Place. It has already been publicly suggested, with some degree of gravity, that the only solution to Campeau's spectacular failure at Lafayette Place is demolition. Offensive without (dumb expanses of flyspecked gray brick), depressing within (Buck Rogers's version of the 25th century was more convincing), and tawdry overall, one can only hope the end comes soon. A parking lot would be a refreshing change (probably more lucrative, too).

Surprisingly enough, International Place isn't a mall but that other great joy of the '80s developer: speculative office space. A gift from Mr. Chiofaro to the city: International Place is hundreds of thousands of square feet of nothing at all wrapped in paper-thin mauve granite and tied with a shiny pink bow. Gee, thanks.

The wild excess and crashing illiteracy of this building are all but unrivaled—it resembles nothing so much as the building that Eva Gabor, playing a cosmetics mogul, commissioned from Mike Brady in a particularly incisive episode of The Brady Bunch: "I want it tall, like a lip-stick, and pink like a powder puff!" Every surface is covered in something glossy and hard and riotously colored—most of it less than an inch thick. In this case, ugliness is skin-deep, although the dominant circular form is equally inexplicable. While it eliminates corporate infighting about who gets the corner office, almost everyone is saddled with awkward angles and disturbing perspective tricks. Its bizarre form also assures that the building stands aloof from the urban fabric, readily identifiable amid the thicket of downtown buildings.

This, of course, is the key to the game of speculative building: the product has to provide exactly the same caliber of raw space as its competition in a given price range, while at the same time positioning itself as something (ha, ha) completely different. All the, uh, excitement comes from a bit of window-dressing, cheap relative to structure and systems. If this little ruse works, the developer gets out with a quick profit, the tenants get pretty much what they wanted — just what everybody else has — and the rest of us are left with a disjointed city of clamoring, obnoxious facades.

What makes International Place particularly offensive is the fact that its architect was not some untrained hick who started off working for Jim and Tammy Faye Bakker, but Philip Johnson (in partnership with John Burgee), the excruciatingly well-educated dean of fashionable American architects. This is a man who knows that to place 500 palladian (Lord Burlington spins in his grave) windows into a grid robs them of any meaning, stripping them of their proper role as indicators of primary spaces in a classical building. An architect capable of exquisite restraint and well-versed in the workings of proportion (as the famous Glass House and attendant structures on his Connecticut estate will attest), Johnson gleefully passed out architectural wooden nickels throughout the eighties, Boston being one of his biggest dupes. Johnson is such a charming trickster, so obviously brilliant and bored, that it's really very hard to hate him properly. But then, International Place hovers into view on the Expressway.

Actually, Johnson also has the honor of being the architect of the building that was so awful, so unspeakably crass, that Bostonians began to snap out of their trance and realize they were being had. 500 Boylston Street, an homage to Houston crude as they come, rises over Back Bay like a pink-and-silver tombstone. Decked out in finial balls and obelisks and trimmed with clunky aluminum spandrels, this elephantine pink cortege was thought an appropriate backdrop for Trinity Church by no less august a body than the directors of New England Life (now The New England). In fact, they liked it so much initially that they were going to build two of them, side by side. A regular graveyard.

Something, perhaps a combination of public outcry (remember the red-slash buttons with a silhouette of the building?) and the dawning horror of the sacrilege they had committed, eventually convinced The New England to fire Johnson from doing the second part of the building and to hire Robert A.M. Stern to build what is now the much-scaled-down 222 Berkeley Street. Perhaps not so coincidentally, this was about the time the boom was running down, and flashy, spec office space was beginning to back up on the market like the contents of an unhappy septic system.

The red-brick 222 Berkeley, while constrained by the same market economies as its trampy sister, manages to weave itself both into the scale and color palette of Back Bay and into the larger fabric of Boston architecture in the classical tradition. Where 500 Boylston snorts, "I've got columns, they's classykul!," 222 Berkeley has columns and pilasters with fully modeled (if a bit too obviously off-the-rack) Ionic capitals, whose finer detail provides the necessary mitigation of scale between the size of the individual human and the mass of the structure.

Stern's 222 Berkeley is actually more convincingly playful than its clownish neighbor: The tiny, gilt-domed State House housing the revolving door and the overt references to the downtown Jordan Marsh store should delight any observant Bostonian. More than anything, one can be thankful for the tasteful choice and interrelation of materials Although the lobby is lined in marble, its satiny beige slabs are just lightly

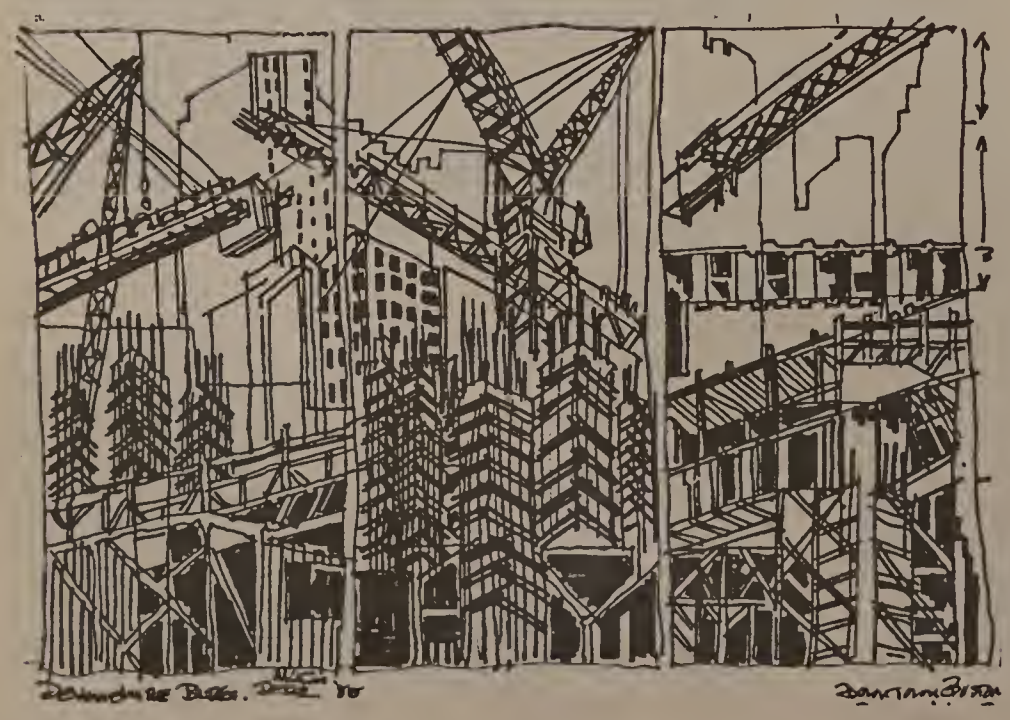
Lunch With Art

Sink your teeth into these visual feasts

Downtown Boston boasts a number of rewarding excursions for those who take art with their brie. All of the following sights are free and open at lunch.



Three exhibit spaces stand within 100 yards of each other in the Financial District. The Conservation Law Foundation (CLF) has recently opened a first floor gallery in its renovated historic building at 62 Summer Street. Here, hanging signs, life-size photographs, and a bathroom built entirely of plastic gallon jugs bring the workings of Boston's water and sewer system up close and very personal. Take home a package of fertilizer pellets and examine the samples of "sludge" and "scum" collected from Boston Harbor. Was CLF thinking of Victor Hugo when it designed this exhibit? We'll never know.

Just down the street, the Society of Arts and Crafts (101 Arch St. Enter at 34 Summer St.) offers a selection of contemporary American crafts, most by local artists. Your arts reviewer lives for jewelry, but it is the furniture, stoneware, ceramics, glass, clay, and fiber art that make this gallery so unusual in Boston. The non-profit Society mounts exhibits and educational events to advance the careers of talented craftspeople.

The Neworld Bank Corporate Gallery (Bank Lobby, 55 Summer St.) has evolved into an important showcase for New England and Boston-area artists. Since 1989, the gallery has featured diverse works by local artists, some emerging and others more established. What other bank has happily installed sculpture, tapestry, mobiles, quilts and water colors in its corporate space? The present show, City Sizzle (until September 30), includes six Massachusetts painters who depict the local scene in summer. Bryan Davagian's Sculling on the Charles is a super-realistic rendition of an athlete pausing on the water and makes an interesting contrast to Geoff Chalmers's atmospheric Boston Harbor at Twilight, which is ablaze with fuschia and purple. Jean Cain's Money to Loan brings Edward Hopper softly to mind.

A five-minute walk brings you to The Federal Reserve Bank of Boston. If you've been run over on the way, collect yourself by the delightful interior fountain in the lobby before proceeding to the gallery. The Fed owns an important collection of post-1950 American art and puts much of it on public view or in office space. The Fed not only thinks big, it buys big too: witness Frank Stella's Damascus Gate III, at 10 x 50 feet one of the largest and most exciting works in the collection. The complex color scheme and precise geometry hypnotize – especially if you've been at a computer terminal all morning. Jack Youngerman's Black Totem (tiny at 10 x 7 feet) offers more organic forms and simple color schemes. Best of all, the Fed sponsors a free lunch-time arts/music series in its auditorium. The fall program starts September 16 with an Argentine Tango performance (hotline 973-3453). Exhibits here and at Neworld Bank change about every six weeks.

Don't let the Boston Athenaeum's strange address (10 1/2 Beacon St.) discourage you from visiting. The primary cultural and artistic institution in 19th-century Boston, the Athenaeum retains every inch of its splendor. A sumptuous interior, important works of art, and a view out over the graveyard all bid us to take advantage of this resource while we still have time. Stop in to look around, and make a mental note to visit the show opening September 22 which will showcase the fine and decorative arts acquired in the past 20 years. For guided tours, call 227-0270. ❑ accented with pink and yellow and not the lethally slick, parti-colored riot that prevails next door. The building displays a clear sense of hierarchy in its massing and fenestration, an admirable restraint in its materials, and a convincing hushed grandeur in its luxury—a sure sign that Boston is coming back to itself.

RICCIARDI RUIN: Boston's first Post Modern ruin.

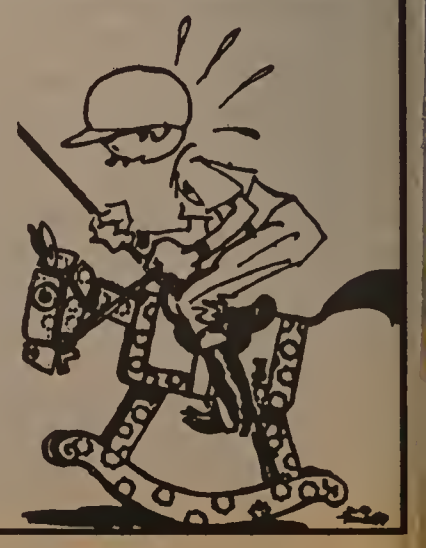
Indeed, in these latter years, the omens have boded well for Boston's aesthetic future, although they've been grim on the economic front. Speculation is all but at a halt; if people build, it is to some definite end, and the results, on balance, are much the better for it. In the blackest years of the '80s glitz storm, a number of Boston architects turned out work of high caliber only to find that their best efforts were often eclipsed in the public eye by the showboat creations of hacks. Happily, those days seem to be over, the dollar signs have been plucked from our eyes, and the business of building Boston has returned to the hands of those who see more solid profit investing in the city and endowing it with substantial, dignified structures than in making a fast buck in a garish shell game.

Mr. Campbell's predictable knee-jerk opinion aside, the most exciting new Bostonian building by far is the Genzyme biotech factory on the banks of the Charles. A beautifully articulated framework of brick-clad steel that will cradle vast bioreactor tanks, this structure adheres to the cardinal rule of intelligibility in building: the purpose of the edifice must be evident in its external form, on second glance, at least. This, most clearly, is a factory—by no means a new thing on these shores: Riverside Press stood opposite for well over a century. Echoing the Beaux Arts steam plant directly across the river, Genzyme's lofty arched windows reveal mammoth steel tendons encircling great open spaces, although the belching smokestacks of heavy industry have given way to a laboratory's neat ranks of ventilation louvers.



The confident ensemble shares an inevitable clarity and material solidity with the best of H.H.. Richardson's work. Alas, there will be no new gems from this source: the design flowed from the hand of the late Joseph Maybank, of Architectural Resources Cambridge, who did not live to see the completion of his masterpiece. We can only hope that this fine building gives direction to others living in its shadow and represents the form of a reborn Boston-based style.

To close on a cautionary note, any Bostonian who feels some lingering remorse for the end of the boom should take a trip to the Neponset marshes some early evening to reflect upon the city's first Postmodern ruin. Hulking in the crook of Route 3 at the Ashmont exit stands the gaunt skeleton of a typical strip-windowed suburban office block, left high and dry when the green speculative tide ran back out to sea. The steel has begun to rust and the wind whistles through gap-toothed wafers of granite hanging in space. Unwanted and unlovable, it will doubtless stand for decades as a mute reminder of the untold damage the boom wrought not only on Boston's inner core, but upon almost every suburb within the 495 belt. Forested hillsides and farms disappeared , fragile wetlands were plowed under, and the history of small towns were razed for strip malls, office parks, and tracts of greasy asphalt that look much the same wherever one goes. Take a moment, in the bilious pulsating glow of the sodium-arc lamps, to think if the half-empty conveniences gained were really worth losing such vital places to bulldozers. Now trudge back to your clapped-out Pacer and wend your quiet way home.

Daniel Varoujan Hejinian

BY NICOLE L. MILLS

Colors of Contrast and Mystery

Daniel Varoujan Hejinian is a big, burly, bear of a man, presenting a physical image strikingly different from the ethereal, mysterious feminine figures who people his sweeping canvasses. But if you tune up your sensory perceptions, and look again at one of his paintings, you'll start to feel the strength and power and passion that swirl through his works. The dreamy, slight form of a girl moves out of a surface of highly-charged color and vibrancy that lends a distinct power to the composition. A willowy and frail-seeming woman stands coolly before a charging, vivid, boldly-colored horse. "The strong colors," says the artist, gazing at one of his pieces hanging at the Brenda Taylor Gallery on Newbury Street, where he recently held a one night show, "give contrast and mystery. Sometimes the colors don't like each other, but the dominant color creates harmony."

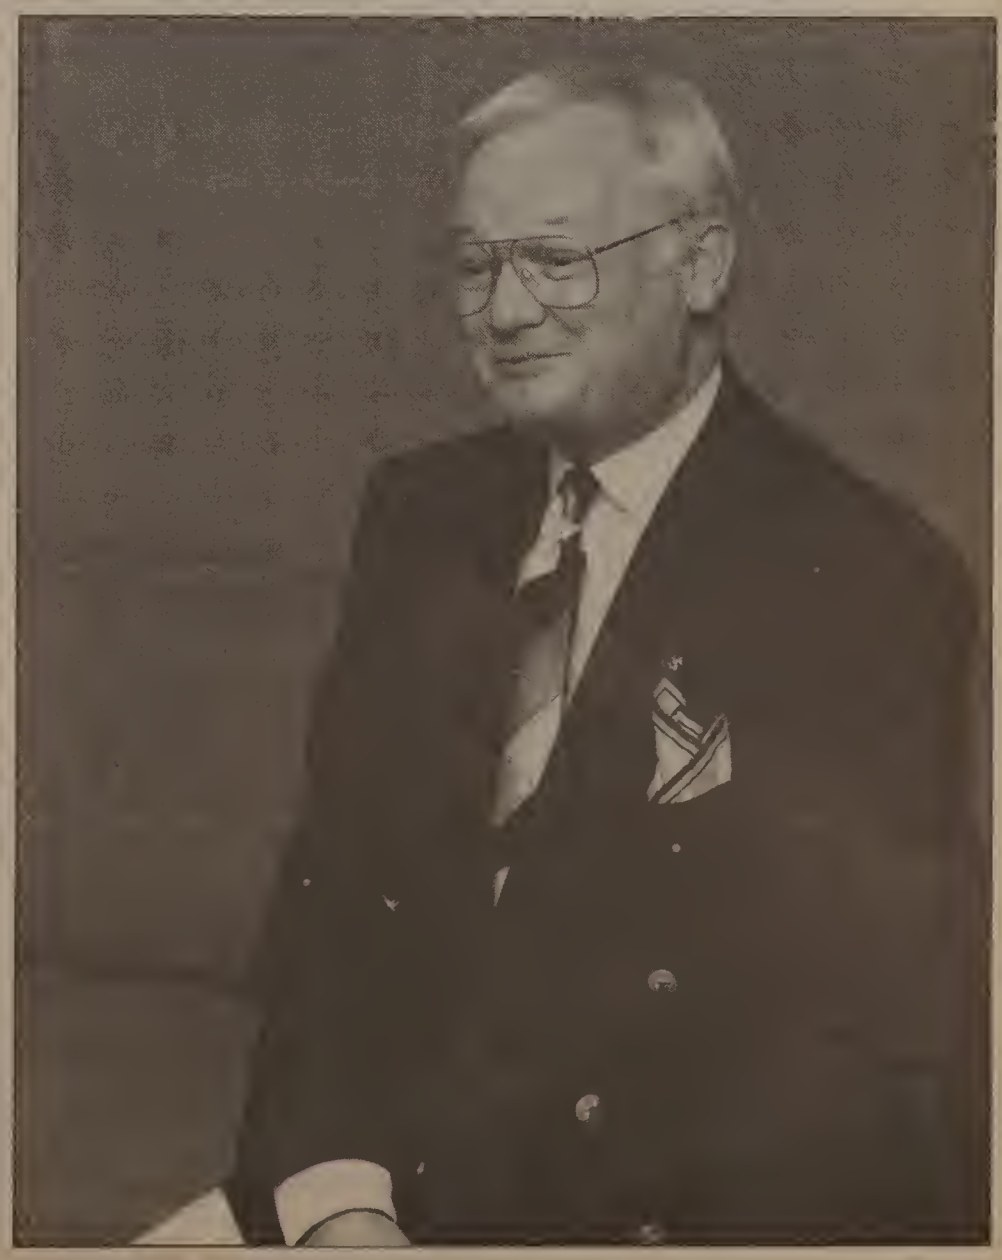
The harmony and integration of the components of the "feminine mystique" is exactly what Varoujan, as he signs his pieces, sets out to convey with his works. The women in his life, his wife, his daughter, his mother, have all been inspirations. "Your mother is your first love," he smiles. But don't read some Oedipally-obsessed sub-context into his works; Varoujan creates his art in an effort to achieve empathy with women, rather than simply slavishly adoring femininity from afar.

Born in Aleppo, Syria, Varoujan left home at 19 to study art in Armenia; he came to the United States 13 years ago and has been working as the art director for Ackerley Communications. His job necessarily entails steeping himself in graphic art in all its commercialized splendor. But, he says, working in this capacity keeps him from letting his own art get too commercial. "My job is my job, and my art is my art. They are two separate things. Having my job supports me and allows me to make my art." While not paying heed to this seeming dichotomy in his own life (many artists seem to believe that commercial success is the ultimate vindication of their art), Varoujan does recognize the duality present in the bold, contrasting strokes and elusive themes present in his work. He reconciles his motifs easily, however: "Womanhood is my inspiration in art, in its power and fullness," he says in his soft, heavily accented voice. One look at his beautiful, powerful, and mysterious figures and landscapes, and you'll understand just what he means.

John Inman

BY JOHN S. HALL

A Free Moment



With such catch phrases as "I'm freeee!" and "Menswear," John Inman has entertained audiences around the world as the ever-swishy salesclerk Mr. Humphries in the campy sitcom "Are You Being Served?" Having once worked in a department store much like the show's Grace Brothers, "I did actually know someone that walked a bit like [Mr. Humphries would]," Inman explains. "And one day, to make the cast laugh, I did it at rehearsals, mincing 'round the corner. The director said, 'Oh, John, we'll have that...' I did it in a couple shows, and then I didn't – and the letters came flooding in, so I had to keep doing it!"

This role – which Inman has re-created in the stage, film, and Australian versions of "Are You Being Served?" as well as its sequel series, "Are You Being Served? Again!" – netted him both the Variety Club's BBC Television Personality of the Year Award and the TV Times's "Funniest Man on Television" in 1976.

In Britain, the fair-haired, 58 year-old actor is known for far more than just Mr. Humphries. He's starred in the TV shows "Odd Man Out" and "Take A Letter, Mr. Jones," where he played a high-powered businesswoman's male secretary. However, he's most famous as one of Britain's premiere "pantomime Dames" (matronly characters traditionally played by men), playing to sold-out audiences in such pantomimes as Mother Goose, Aladdin, and Jack and the Beanstalk. Over here, "pantomime" brings to mind people like Marcel Marceau, but Britain's pantomimes are glitzy musical presentations of fairy tales, geared towards children, but containing innuendo to amuse adults as well. As an actor, Inman prefers the theater's "Immediacy," and says that "To hear huge laughter coming at you ... it's like a drug!"

Asked what he does in his spare time, Inman jokes "My stock answer to that is, I drink gin and watch television! I'm very boring inasmuch as I haven't got a hobby... I'm a member of the Grand Order of Water Rats, a 104-year-old charity organization made up of gentlemen from the theater. In fact, I'm 'King Rat' this year."

With "Are You Being Served? Again!" canceled in Britain, his next project is a Christmas-time production of his favorite pantomime, Mother Goose, once he recuperates from his appearances at PBS stations across America. "Although it's very hard work," Inman notes, "I'm looked after royally!"

AMERICAN HEART

This low-budget, independent feature restores to cinema the off-beat, gritty Seattle of yore before the city became synonymous with single, sleepless yuppies crying into their Starbuck's cappuccino. Unfortunately it turns Seattle's unhappy street life into a freak show. Jack Kelson (Jeff Bridges), a stringy-haired and tattooed ex-con who's out on parole tries to walk the straight line in Seattle so he can make it to Alaska. But he's stuck with a job washing windows, a not very helpful ex-partner, and a round-the-clock conscience: his 15-year-old son. While there's something ever-potent in the story of a motherless, wise-before-his-time boy trying to domesticate his erratic, irresponsible dad, the film alternates between having no plot or suddenly, too much plot and a stupid one at that.

AMONGST FRIENDS

Goodfellas meets "Beverly Hills 90210." Juiced-up tale of Jewish gangster life on Long Island, with three young wannabes, once close friends, going their separate ways. The dumb one's trying to keep up a good show, the nasty one's getting more violent by the day and the one who did time is trying to figure out life. Natch, an old girlfriend creates conflict. Testosterone level runs very high here, with lots of macho posturing, guns and expensive haircuts. Style definitely overwhelms content and characterization – some very flashy camera work but the movie is awfully shallow. Question is, why does writer/director Rob Weiss glamorize this bunch of louts so much? Great score and soundtrack by Mick Jones, of Clash/B.A.D. fame.

Producer Lorne Michaels recruits almost the entire cast of "Saturday Night Live" for this extended comedy sketch. As with the NBC show, the scenes range from riotous to bland. After a crash landing, the Coneheads, Beldar (Dan Aykroyd) and Prymaat (Jane Curtin), make the best of suburbia among the "bluntskulls" in Paramus, NJ. Life is surprisingly human: they run the family business, face marital problems, and help their teenage daughter through school and dating. On Saturdays they relax and "consume mass quantities" at the backyard barbecue. Curiously, no one seems to mind their cone heads: the community accepts them as the ideal family. If only people in real life could be so open-minded.

The Fugitive is quintessential Harrison Ford. No one cracks nervous jokes while under fire quite the way Ford does, and since the part of Doctor Kimble, the film's protagonist, calls for a lot of that, it fits Ford like a glove. As the falsely convicted killer of his beloved wife, he wins our sympathy. As the escapee pursuing his wife's killer, he wins our admiration. And as a daredevil fugitive who risks life and limb to evade hardheaded but good-humored lawman Tommy Lee Jones, he wins our attention. Our attention drifts though, as the spectacular action/chase scenes are replaced by dry details of Kimble's investigation. We are too prepared for the ending, which winds down in trite anti-climactic fight scenes.

Wolfgang Peterson directs this exciting, coherent, and often humorous action thriller starring Clint Eastwood as Secret Service Agent Frank Horrigan, a "borderline burnout with questionable social skills" who still feels guilty that he didn't protect JFK that day in Dallas. Frank gets a second chance compliments of rogue CIA operative and would-be-Presidential-assassin Mitch Leary (John Malkovich), who engages Frank in a game of cat and mouse. Renee Russo is good as career Secret Service Agent Lilly Raines and Frank's love interest. Almost over-the-hill Frank is less believable as Lily's love interest even if he does adore jazz, play the piano and grin disarmingly after making chauvinist remarks.

Death toll: 90 plus. Jeffrey Dahmer eat your heart out. This movie provides background info on the other Jason movies as well as an answer to that biting question: Why won't he die? Here the demented, disfigured serial killer takes on a supernatural side. Jason is no longer human; he's a slimy, grotesque bodily organ which evades death by slithering into person after person. The cast is killed in wonderfully horrible ways, usually involving a sharp instrument. But the two hero/sweethearts survive and walk into the sunset. Jason is finally dead. It's finally safe to go back to Crystal Lake. Yeah, right.

RISING SUN

Director Philip Kaufman's elegant and confounding film based on Michael Crichton's novel is a Japanese mystery tour set in L.A. that begins when a prostitute is found dead on the Nakamoto Corporation's boardroom table. The two L.A.P.D. Special Services liaison officers assigned to the case (Sean Connery and Wesley Snipes) complement each other. Connery is wise; Snipes is an everyman who has much to learn – about the Japanese and about himself. Kaufman flashes ideas at us like lightning, but doesn't always develop them. His exploration of corporate culture is disturbing: big business is, above all, a man's world. Girls, there's room for you at the top, too, provided you're a gorgeous prostitute.

Virginia Woolf's Orlando, about the time-traveling adventures of a man who awakens transformed into a woman, is more engaging than its original readers would concede. Orlando the movie is empty, empty, despite the poetic passages and ethereal cinematography and the heaps of devotees who find Consequence and Importance just at the places where Woolf's readers found all style and no content. Potter can't direct and, worse for the high humor of Woolf's Orlando, she certainly can't direct comedy. On the other hand, Quentin Crisp, pioneering gay activist for The Naked Civil Servant, makes a prim and perfectly rouged Queen Elizabeth I.

SEARCHING FOR BOBBY FISCHER

A genuinely heartwarming tearjerker that doesn't wholly sacrifice complexity and intelligence when it's yanking your strings. Josh Waitzkin (Max Pomeranc) is a seven-year-old whiz at chess, described in the loaded chess phrase as a "young Bobby Fischer." The film captures the excitement and dangers of having such gifts, and makes no demand that viewers necessarily understand or care about chess. The most prominent theme is the battle between the father (the excellent Joe Mantegna) and Josh's two wildly different chess teachers, played by Ben Kingsley and Larry Fishburne, over Josh's upbringing and his inhibiting decency. Pomeranc is terrific, avoiding smarmy precociousness – and you can't help but love those big eyes.

DEAD FROM NEW YORK

"...[Keaton and Allen's] addled babbling, frantic pacing and neurotic silliness is as funny as ever..."

Manhattan Murder Mystery is a meringue: light, insubstantial, and such a treat. It's a funny mystery and a suspenseful comedy. But best of all, it reunites Diane Keaton and Woody Allen. After a hiatus of more than ten years, the two fall comfortably into their old shtick – Keaton as the Ditz, Allen as the Nebbish – and their addled babbling, frantic pacing, and neurotic silliness is as funny as ever and still recalls the Marx Brothers. Together Keaton and Allen, unlike Mia Farrow and Allen, are greater than the sum of their parts.

MAMA MIA: Diane Keaton, a last minute replacement for Mia Farrow and Woody Allen.

They play Carol and Larry Lipton, a bright, tweedy Manhattan couple. One night they return home after dinner and a movie – Double Indemnity (hint, hint) – to find medics wheeling their neighbor out of her apartment on a stretcher. She's dead of a heart attack. Carol, who barely knew the woman or her spouse, is sure she's been murdered and that the husband did it. With fearless, looney determination, she sets out to prove she's right.

Manhattan Murder Mystery pays tribute to several movie classics, but it most resembles Rear Window. Hitchcock's great Manhattan murder mystery demonstrates just how sexy murder can be: it proves a tonic for Grace Kelly and Jimmy Stewart's ailing relationship. Murder also livens up Carol and Larry's twenty-year, comfortable old-shoe marriage: "I'm just vibrating from this," gushes Carol.

2nd International Festival of Short Films

Murder isn't the only marriage pick-me-up. A rival works wonders, too. Ted (Alan Alda), a divorced friend, has a crush on Carol and shares her lurid imagination and enthusiasm for cracking the mystery. Larry is worried, but he has a wild card to play: Marcia Fox (Anjelica Houston), an artsy, street-smart writer who has a crush on him and whom he fixes up with Ted. Alda is very good, but Houston, as always, dominates the screen.

As light and cheerful as Manhattan Murder Mystery is, it has a nostalgic, "September Song" feel. The story takes place during the fall, and the city, as well as the interiors, give off a golden, autumnal glow. The movie is another Allen love song to a Manhattan that in real life increasingly resembles the city in Blade Runner. Manhattan isn't the only thing that's decaying. In the opening scene, Carol makes a crack about Larry's failing eyesight. While Allen doesn't so much explore middle-age as exploit it for laughs, he does face the condition head-on. The actors are photographed to look their age or older: in a couple of shots Keaton's face looks positively furrowed. There's hope though: the impassive and seemingly dull ("Let me show you my stamp collection") murder suspect, a man in his sixties, lives by far the most exciting life of all the characters.

The nostalgia seeps in from the outside, too. Keaton is on screen out of friendship and loyalty to Allen: she replaced Mia Farrow at the last minute. (The only hint of Allen's off-screen troubles comes when Larry announces, for no discernible reason, that Ted's ex-wife "...thought I was a wimp, a lowlife, vermin, a roach."). But so what if all good things must end, that we're all getting older but no wiser. Just rent Play It Again Sam, Sleeper, Annie Hall, or Manhattan and for a little while, time will stand still.

Heart of Cold

"...Un Coeur en Hiver is a film to respect, but alas, not really to enjoy..."

If Un Coeur en Hiver feels as logical, insular, and dispassionate as a biology laboratory test, that's because of the way director Claude Sautet approached his film: the camera as microscope peering onto a controlled experiment in human behavior. According to Sautet's pre-plan, "There would be one character who seemed 'modern' in the negative sense, completely impenetrable to emotion. Immediately, the world of musicians came to mind – the music profession. We would keep one central idea intact: to make a woman fall in love with him so he would have the perverse pleasure of telling her 'I do not love you.'"

TWO HEARTS: Daniel Auteuil and Emanuelle Beart in Un Coeur en Hiver.

The "modern" character, Stéphane (Daniel Auteuil), became a violin repairman maestro, capable of the ultra-ultra fine tuning required when his boss, Maxim (André Dussollier), complains of "A lack of brilliance on the E String!"

At night, Maxim opts for genial restaurants and pleasant women, and soon he announces his engagement to a gorgeous young violinist (Emmanuelle Béart). Meanwhile, Stéphane spends evenings alone, joylessly repairing marionettes.

One can ask, "what attracts Camille to Stéphane?" Sautet has commented about his film. "Why does she find charm in his behavior? Truthfully, I don't know."

Whatever the weird reason, Camille switches her attention from her extroverted fiancé, Maxim, to his stone-faced employee, Stéphane, a man incapable of even faking emotion. While she chases him madly ("You should have fucked me!"), Stéphane looks on her with dead eyes and deader body. And remember, this is actress Emmanuelle Béart, the sensual star of Manon of the Spring!

Credit Sautet with maintaining his cool "lab experiment" atmosphere, allowing his characters to act out their lives without directorial manipulation. But Sautet's integrity is also what damages Un Coeur en Hiver. Ultimately, there's no place for the audience to breathe in this oxygenless movie, never mind having someone to root for among his dour cast.

Un Coeur en Hiver is a film to respect, but, alas, not really to enjoy.

Black to the Promised Land

Searching for cross-cultural harmony

What everyone needs now is this sweet, ecumenical, back-to-school, "feel-good" documentary.

In 1989, eleven African-American teenagers from deep, deep in Brooklyn's Bedford-Stuyvesant traveled across the world to spend two months living and working on an Israeli kibbutz. Despite gripes about rugged, rigid kibbutznik life (some legitimate), and cross-cultural grumbles (far less than you'd expect), the valiant kids stuck it out.

Most went home to Brooklyn with tears in their eyes, sad to leave Israeli pals. The Israelis sobbed too, fearing that the kibbutz would be socially dead without their partying, wild-and-crazy American friends.

On both sides? Knowledge that common ground exists, and that Jews and African-Americans can be friends. If that's not heartening enough, Black to the Promised Land presents a splendid case for the Bedford-Stuyvesant Eleven in its interviews. Although forgotten minority students at an alternative high school for "problem" kids, they are every one of them bright, articulate, energetic, and good-natured. Maybe Rousseau and his followers really are correct: within every so-called "bad" kid there's a very good one trying to crawl out.

It's possible to accuse director Madeleine Ali, who is a French-Haitian-East Indian-African-American convert to Judaism, of soft-pedaling "serious" politics. Hard-boiled racism between American Jews and African-Americans isn't even mentioned, and the Arab-Israeli conflict is reduced to a desire, by one of the African-American kids, that "Both sides should get together and make peace."

Still, this could be one time that heavy ideology is put aside. Probably it's far more important to see Jews and African-Americans dancing together at a kibbutz Purim party, or an African-American girl with her arms draped around an Israeli girl, whom she calls "my little sister."

Comedy / John Hall

"Out" Rageous

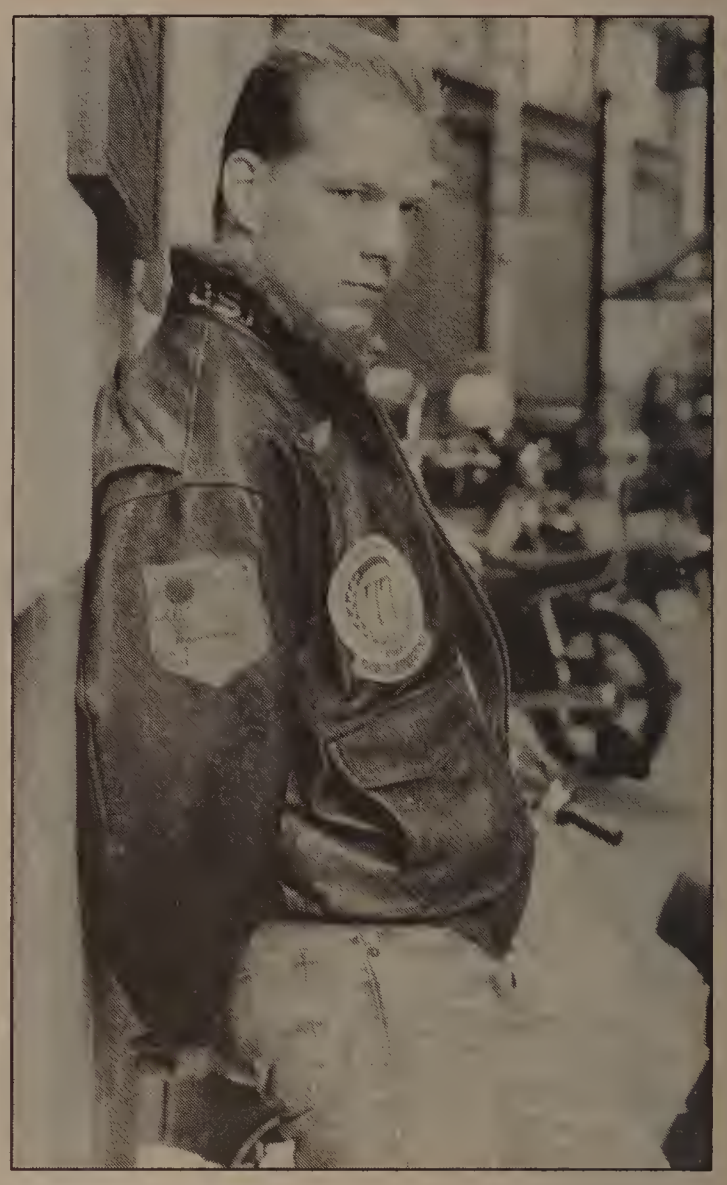
"...My whole thing is showing that gay comics don't have to be flamboyant or feminine..."

With his spiky blonde hair and bright blue eyes, Greg Roman looks as wholesome and all-American as baseball and apple pie. Which makes it all the more surprising when, several minutes into his routine, he nonchalantly asks, "So, are there any gay people in the audience tonight?"

A few strained chuckles greet this unexpected query.

"I only ask that question to hear all those sphincter muscles contract," Roman says with a blank expression that quickly turns to a sly grin. At this point, the crowd laughs in relief and begins clapping. Usually. "One of my last crowds just didn't get it," he explains. "I think 80% of them didn't even know what the word 'sphincter' meant."

Roman also received an unexpected response when he recently played at Caroline's in New York. "The audience got very protective at first; they thought I might have been a gay-basher, which was kind of refreshing."



Roman, who fits none of the usual gay stereotypes, emphasizes that he's just a regular guy who happens to be gay. "My whole thing is showing that gay comics don't have to be flamboyant or feminine," he says. "Just a regular guy, no different from them. I don't want to play gay clubs, because my material is really geared to straight audiences, to show them that their stereotypical views of gays are wrong."

As an employee of Boston's largest ad agency, Hill, Holliday, Connors, and Cosmopulous, Roman has been "out" at work for years, and says it's no big deal. "I feel that gay people shouldn't have to 'explode' when they come out." However, his comedy career has certainly exploded in a very short time. "I've only been doing true stand-up for three months," he explains. "It's one of the toughest things you can do; you have no back-up, so if things go poorly, you can't blame the band, only yourself."

Roman started at clubs like Stitches and Dick Doherty's Rooms – "Way out in the boonies; those people didn't get me at all. I scared 'em" – and went on to Nick's Comedy Stop and Comedy Connection at Fanueil Hall. He recently returned from a successful appearance at Caroline's in New York City. "I did very well there," he says. "They want me back, and might even tape me for 'Caroline's Comedy Hour' on A&E."

As an openly gay comedian, Roman can broach gay issues which concern and affect his heterosexual audiences. Mention of gays in the military brings a tense silence, which he quickly deflates with an over-the-top caricature of a gay soldier trying to break up a mob: "Thargeant, they won't dithperthe!" But most of the time he's content to make satirical observations about life and toy with being gay on stage: "Am I the only guy who likes bananas for the shape? You girls know what I mean..." and "I ran the Boston Marathon for the first time this year. Boy, let me tell you, it's murder trying to skip for 26 miles..." Roman used to accompany his routine with physical examples of what he was describing, but is now content to "let [the audience] think of the visuals – it's funnier for them."

For the future, Greg Roman has two goals: appearing on either "Arsenio" or "David Letterman," and "Breaking the barrier to Middle America," by trying to make people more comfortable with gay people. "With all this gay stuff in the news," he says, "straight people are almost waiting for someone like me." ❑

HANGOVER HELPERS

When drunken bliss sobers to dreadful morning after; try these proven remedies for relief.

Everyone has their own "should-probably-be-patented" hangover helper, a personal concoction part medical study twice-removed, part self-tested standby, and part coincidence that you felt "pretty darn good" the morning after you drank tequila with your left hand and then sang Slim Whitman tunes until you fell asleep under your bed. Whatever works for you.

If you're interested in what works for doctors, The Doctors Book of Home Remedies (Bantam Books) offers not only medically founded methods for dealing with hangovers, but also 702 cheap little paperback pages full of every home remedy you could possibly need, and I wouldn't lie to you for the mere 10 percent of sales they're giving me. These hangover helpers are more effective if you remember to use them the night before, after brushing, flossing, doing sit-ups, taking out the garbage, and getting a little headstart on next year's tax return. They're still effective, however, if taken the morning after. But what's best is that only a few of these home remedies are as freaky as this first one...

Willow bark, according to doctors who have apparently eaten willow bark of their own free will, is an excellent hangover helper because the salicylate (big word also contained in aspirin) works to ease your headache and general discomfort. You can gnaw on willow bark in most woodland areas (Nova Scotia being renowned for its "Willow bark cooked just right.") or you can get it at any health food store, though that would be the easy way out.

Aspirin and Water combine for the most commonly practiced home hangover remedy (aside from the Slim Whitman thing). The salicylate in aspirin still (since the last paragraph) quells headaches and general discomfort, but it's the influx of water that really makes a difference to your dehydrated bodily symptoms. I recommend 25 or 60 big glasses of water for relief, as well as leaving the faucet running. (Water company commission: eight percent.)

B-complex vitamins can help shorten the duration of your hangover because your body counts on B-complex to cope with stress. Next.

Bouillon broth, when it's not busy curing everything, can help your hangover by replenishing the salt and potassium your body has lost to alcohol.

The following hangover helpers come from a recent Men's Health newsletter, in accordance with the Four Tips Per Source Maximum, You Lazy Writer pact I have with my editor ("Good writer, sit, sit – good writer.")

Fructose is your friend, as well as (coincidentally) being a form of sugar which helps the body burn alcohol faster. Recommended fructose-rich refreshments are early-morning OJ or a large glass of tomato juice (not in the form of a Bloody Mary —unless you're buying). Honey on crackers or toast provides fructose as well as something to settle your queasy stomach.

Coffee offers ample headache relief because the caffeine acts as a vasoconstrictor, which isn't easy to act like without looking up the word vasoconstrictor ("An agent that narrows the interior diameter of blood vessels."). This "narrowing" reduces the swelling of blood vessels which cause headaches.

If you're a steadfast believer that commercial remedies must be more effective than home remedies because you have to pay for them, then you're absolutely correct. Or you're absolutely incorrect. But either way we've made the transition to commercial remedies. (Smoo-ooth, Anthony, real smooooth - Editor's interjection.)

Dr. Seltzer's "Hangover Helper" (no relation to the extremely innovative title of this article) provides the entire cavalry of pain reliever, antacid and stimulant. For under a buck you can sample two capsules available at convenience stores or your favorite bar-bathroom vending machine.

"XS" is a relatively new hangover relief product, in the sense I actually had to do some research to find it, research that had best be reflected in my upcoming paycheck. ("Extra whipped cream on his mediùm sundae, please."). Even though "XS" is a tad more expensive than "Hangover Helper," I'm pretty sure it's more effective because its list of helpful 18-letter word ingredients was much longer. As to whether "XS" is truly more effective, there was no way I was going to subject myself to its "Refreshing Peppermint / Chalky Fax-Paper-Gone-Bad" taste. ("Not even for extra walnuts?... Good writer, good...") ❑

Ring of Fire Travel Agency

Iceland is surrounded by endless miles of seething ocean. It is pummeled by Arctic winds and perilous storms. Its latitude and longitude converge in as desolate a place as any on the planet. And while no one can say for certain what could have possessed the Vikings to come to this place we call Iceland over a hundred centuries ago, we do know what they found once they got here.

The Vikings braved 50-foot seas, gale winds and sea monsters to discover our water. Surely you can manage a trip to the corner market.

A valley. A mountain. And a spring surging up from a place deep beneath the surface of the earth. Forcing its way upward, through ice, solidified layers of lava, and rock. Until, finally, it burst through into the sunlight. A water of such improbable purity, there are those among us who, even now, fervently believe that it surely must have sprung up from the very gods themselves.

The same Icelandic spring of life that continues to flow as clean and clear now as it has since the Ice Age. Indeed, from the very beginning of time itself. Thousands upon thousands of miles from anywhere. Untainted. Untouched. Unspoiled by civilization.

We call it Akva. A spring water unlike any other on earth. And if we seem a bit confident in this, rest assured it is not without good reason.

No other spring water, after all, comes from a place so completely and utterly removed from the compromising influences of civilization. To put it mildly, Iceland is as far off the beaten path as any place on earth.

As a result, our Akva spring water is remarkably soft. Clear. Without so much as a trace of sodium or other impurities. We hope you will try Akva.

You will find that it's available now on the shelves of your favorite corner market or delicatessen.

We know the Vikings had an almost insatiable thirst for adventure. Perhaps now we know how they quenched it.

Akva spring water. The pure soul of Iceland.™

ENHANCING YOUR PURCHASING POWER

"...To get the most from whatever shop you patronize, you need a basic strategy..."

Overpopulation, crime in the streets, the advance of the killer bees, man's inhumanity to man. The truth is, people have enough on their minds without having to worry about wine.

Not surprisingly, most consumers just want to know: "What should I buy?" This is exactly the information I need when shopping for something I haven't had time to extensively research. Unfortunately, there is no simple answer.

On the one hand, the overwhelming majority of bottles you will find on retail shelves are without noticeable wine-making flaws. This was far from true as recently as a decade ago, so the good news is that now virtually nothing you buy will smell of rotten eggs or taste like lighter fluid.

But simply presuming that the soundness of what is available automatically implies interesting flavors, good values, or even a bottle whose style fits your specific needs, is quite a leap of faith. It might happen but don't bet the whole hacienda on it. Your odds will improve dramatically, though, if you locate a retail merchant committed to finding quality wine and getting it onto your table at a price you feel comfortable paying.

Times have never been better to develop this type of mutually beneficial relationship. Simply put, there is too much wine being produced worldwide, and too many people trying to sell it to too few consumers. In the long term the resulting squeeze on profits in the industry actually bodes poorly for the consumer, but the immediate result is that your business now should be more highly valued by the local retailer than ever before. Savvy store owners understand that survival in this gladiatorial arena requires increased levels of service and expertise. However, to get the most from whatever shop you patronize, you need a basic strategy.

While it may sound absurd at first reading, the single most crucial fact you need to establish wherever you contemplate shopping is whether the person helping you really loves wine. A retailer's eagerness to share his passion for wine should loom larger in your deliberations than his apparent knowledge. Why? Because real passion cannot be faked (I think), whereas superficial acquaintance with trade jargon, displays of pseudo-science and references to other people's published opinions may all sound good but are cheaply acquired.

Asking the right questions is your key to discovering if whoever selects products for the store feels genuine enthusiasm for wine. This does not mean trying to stump the retailer with annoying trivia. It entails measuring his credibility by finding out whether he cares about his selections or if they just represent interchangeable merchandise.

Be persistent and pay close attention to how the salesperson handles your inquiry. Is his response skillful, bombastic or derisive? Does he fumble or display impatience? Does he answer the question adequately?

An example: "Beringer makes a Fumé Blanc I've enjoyed at a reasonable price. What else can you recommend in that range to accompany grilled shellfish?"

You have offered the retailer a world of information (cost, style, the purpose for which you want the wine, the latitude to recommend based on his palate) and any professional should take this cue to describe a number of interesting choices. Take heed though if all you hear are the names of a few other mainstream brands or a litany of newsletter ratings.

Worst-case scenarios: "Beringer? Who makes that, Gallo?"

"Good question, let me look that up in this wine-buying guide."

"Beringer. That swill – I won't carry it."

"You really don't want California Fumé with shellfish. I was in Bordeaux last summer having lunch with Jean-Michel Froufrou, and let me tell you something, the only wine to have is Chateau Le Dreque, which we happen to have on sale while it lasts at $79.99 a case. You should know: the price is a joke. These local distributors don't have a clue how to sell stuff like this at a profit."

Don't put up with anything like this, but don't expect there to be any short-cuts either. Keep trying until you connect up with a retailer who respects your business as much as he seems to love his own. After that it should be easy. ❑

New Celebrity on Stage

TABLE TALK

Walter Zuromski has left his position as executive chef at the Mill Falls restaurant in Newton. The new owners of the Loading Zone on Kneeland Street have changed the name of the restaurant to the Art Zone. Celebrity Roast will be opening at the location of the old Stage Deli in Brookline and a new Fajitas 'n Ritas has opened in the old Open Sesame spot on Boylston Street near Brookline Village. Look for a new addition to the Park Square area — more info soon.

ENCORE! ENCORE!

One of our favorite restaurants in Providence is New Rivers on Steeple street. Bruce and Pat, the chefs/owners of the restaurant, were in New York City last week cooking at the James Beard House as a part of the foundation's "Discovery Series". The menu was filled with Moroccan influences...chilled fava bean and almond soup, slices of beef tenderloin stuffed with spinach and saffron rice, and swordfish with harissa rub and Moroccan honey-spiced butter. For those that missed the New York dinner, Bruce and Pat will soon have an "encore" dinner at New Rivers where they will repeat the Moroccan menu. Call the restaurant for the date and directions. New Rivers - (401) 751-0350.

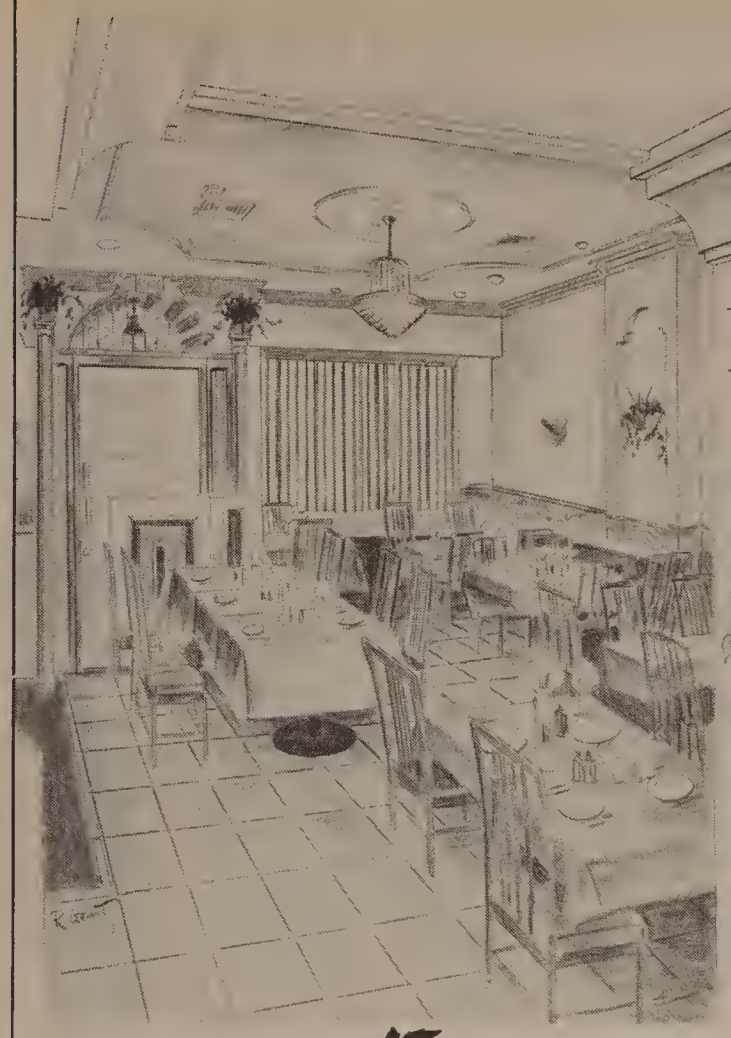
Salem Street in the North End has been abuzz with activity this summer with restaurants popping up everywhere. L'Osteria moved across the street to a new location and before one could say arrivederci a new restaurant called Al Dente appeared in its former spot. Less than a block away, a new restaurant named Terramia opened last week. Mineo Ristorante, just steps away from Salem on Prince, re-opened recently serving dinner, and a new cafe called Caffe LaStrada should be opening in the next week or so across from La Famiglia. Meanwhile, construction is in process at two other locations just down the street. And not to forget the individual entrepreneur, an Italian grandmother has been doing a healthy business selling homemade lemonade from her stand on the corner of Salem and Prince streets.



ENTERTAINING AT HOME?

Le Chef Mobile is a service for people who would love to entertain at home but just don't have the time to whip up a five course meal. The chef/owner is Pierre Jenatton, a French native, who has been in the U.S. for ten years practicing his culinary arts at hotels and restaurants throughout the country. Here in Boston, Pierre decided to venture out on his own. Le Chef Mobile will consult with the client on the menu, do the shopping, bring in any needed kitchen equipment, select the wine, prepare the food, and then clean up the kitchen. Also included is a staff of servers who will provide 4-star quality service. Parties range from 4 people up with menus priced from $25 - $250 per person. Transform your home into your favorite restaurant. Le Chef Mobile - 734-5385.

SAVE THESE DATES

On Sunday, September 26th, the Improper writers of this column will be on the Food Hour Show, WBZ - 1030 AM, to talk about career waitstaff and the service part of the food industry. The show will run from 4 - 5pm and accompanying us will be several waitpersons who will talk about the industry. Our readers and the general public will be invited to call in and voice an opinion. Good service in a restaurant is a really important part of the complete dining experience, so please let us know how you feel!

If you are curious about the new restaurants in the new Prudential Center, come to a preview of the menus called A Taste of the Prudential Center, Wednesday, September 8th, 5:30 - 7:30pm. The preview will be held on the Boylston Street plaza and all proceeds will benefit the Neighborhood Association of the Back Bay. Tickets are $20 per person and please call 247-3961 for information. ❑

Worlds Away. . . Just Across the River

". . [Papa and Goose] hopes to 'promote cultural awareness through culinary tradition'. . ."

Next time you find yourself over the river at the Cambridgeside Galleria and you are in need of some sustenance, give yourself a treat and venture just outside the mall, where you'll find a delightful respite from the shopping frenzy. This new Cambridge restaurant, whimsically named Poppa & Goose, offers an experience, not just a meal.

Created by alumni from Harvard, MIT, and Tufts Universities, Poppa & Goose's mission is to create a link between Cambridge and its diverse international student population. They hope to "promote cultural awareness through culinary tradition."

IF YOU GO

Poppa & Goose

369 First Street
Cambridge, MA

The interior of the restaurant is spacious, stylish, and airy, with various ethnic nuances which reflect the pan-Asian cuisine. The space itself is divided into three areas: the front dining area, a display kitchen where cooking lessons take place, and a grocery area. Individual pepper mills, crocks of chili-garlic paste, and soy sauce adorn each table. Fork, knife and Asian soup spoon are set at each table, but chopsticks are gladly supplied by the helpful servers upon request.

We began our meal with an appetizer sampler: fresh Vietnamese spring roll with peanut sauce, fried spring roll with nuoc mam, shrimp paste on baguette, fried gyoza with dipping sauce, and shrimp on sugar cane. All were very delicious and authentically prepared.

We then sampled a large hu tieu soup, which was packed full with rice noodles, shrimp, pork, and lovely fresh vegetables and cilantro. A typical accompaniment of bean sprouts, lemon and cilantro were provided for us to add into the light, rich broth as we ate.

Entrees were served in wide ceramic bowls and came with a huge bowl of aromatic jasmine rice to share family style. The salmon special for the evening was prepared in a spicy tomato Thai sauce. This consisted of at least 8 full oz. of Atlantic salmon, fresh plum tomatoes, asparagus and other fresh vegetables.

Szechuan seafood was another plentiful dish consisting of squid and shrimp. Gently simmered in a light oyster sauce broth, it was brimming with what must be their standard house mix of vegetables. Both entrees were beautifully presented, plentiful and very fresh. Apparently, the dishes are created for the Western palate, so if you are hoping to find the food spicy, you should request that the kitchen "turn up the heat," and they will gladly accommodate you.

We topped off our meal by sharing the flan au caramel. One of the best we've sampled in a long time, this flan was decadent with a thin wafer of coconut forming a crisp, sweet bottom layer. A refreshing mango shake served as a delightful palate cleanser throughout the meal. Vietnamese style coffee, dripped from an individual strainer into a glass with a perfect amount of sweetened condensed milk measured into it, could be addictive. There are no alcoholic beverages available on premises, but you are welcome to BYOB.

Poppa & Goose is a delightful restaurant and an intriguing community concept. Lunch specials are abundant and seem to be in line with the rest of the very reasonably priced menu. Take out is available and lessons on Saturday are informal and by request. It is worth the trip and worth requesting the food spiced to your preference. ❑

About Last Night. . . Lauren Dare AKA The Last Call Lady

SPASTIC SPASSO

"...Thursday night is the big night for Spasso: Every yuppie, tuppy, buppy and skip within a six block radius is either at the granite topped bar or out on Spasso's lovely brick patio..."

Whoa, where did all these people come from? I mean, don't they have to work tomorrow too? It is Thursday, after all. In the world of corporate combustion and fireworks, most people are still expected to make an appearance at the office before noon, even if it is Friday. But at 11:00 p.m. on a Thursday night, the elbow to elbow crowd at Spasso, on the corner of Commonwealth Avenue and Dartmouth Street, is happily sweating up a storm, tossing back liquid delights like there's no tomorrow (or at least no tomorrow where an alarm clock is set to 7:00 a.m.), and doing what is commonly referred to in the vernacular as scamming. There's a sociologist's wet dream's worth of human behavioral studies going on here tonight, boys and girls. There's more Back Bay bonafides on the make in the far corner of the bar than you can shake a stick at.

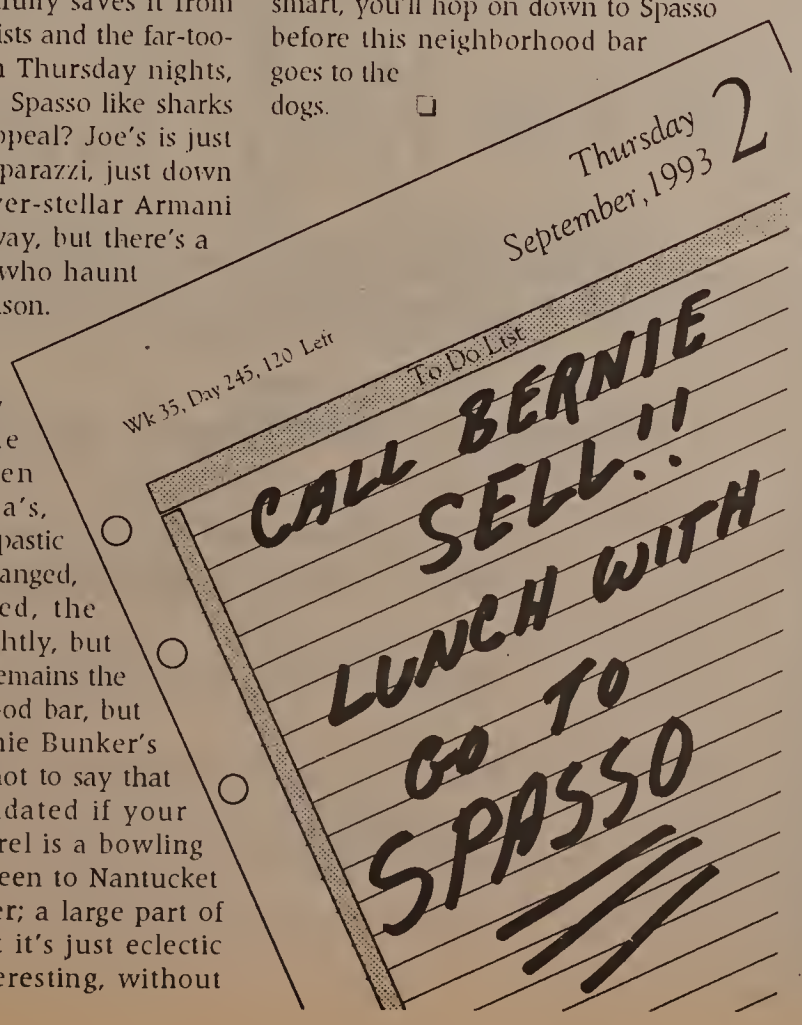
SPASSO



160 Commonwealth Ave.
Last Call: 1a.m.

Thursday night is The Big Night for Spasso; every yuppy, tuppy, buppy and Skip within a six block radius is either at the granite-topped bar, or out on Spasso's lovely brick patio. By day, this little gussied-up Italian eatery masquerades as a perfectly normal restaurant. Its location on the block of Dartmouth that's away from Newbury Street mercifully saves it from being over-run by tourists and the far-too-common man. But on Thursday nights, the hordes descend on Spasso like sharks on bait. What's the appeal? Joe's is just around the corner, Paparazzi, just down the street, and the ever-stellar Armani Express just a block away, but there's a strong core of people who haunt Spasso, and for good reason.

Spasso has gone through several incarnations in the past few years. It has, over the course of its life, been Corey's, Montana's, Pearson's, and finally, spastic Spasso. The food has changed, the name has changed, the decor has changed slightly, but the essential character remains the same. It's a neighborhood bar, but it's definitely not Archie Bunker's neighborhood. This is not to say that you should be intimidated if your favorite piece of apparel is a bowling shirt, or you haven't been to Nantucket even once this summer; a large part of Spasso's charm is that it's just eclectic enough to keep it interesting, without becoming cloyingly trendy or excruciatingly individualistic. In other words, like, a wicked lotta different people go there, ya know?

This past Thursday, there was quite an impressive amount of talent at the bar. To the left and to the right, the shiny, happy faces blurred into a comforting vision of late night escapades. There was an overwhelming majority of late-twenties, materialistically inclined, fellow bar-goers. There was one guy in particular that I see absolutely everywhere. This mystery man must go out as much as I do, and believe me, that's no mean feat. I've exchanged glances with him in bars from here to Newport, but so far, no dialogue. Hmmm. I guess I hadn't had enough White Russians last night to get up the fortitude to introduce myself, but one of these days...

Anyway, as soon I walked into the bar, the crowd parted like the Red Sea before Moses, a nice refreshing drink was placed in my hand, and I settled in to watch the action. The nice thing about Spasso is that the action is available if you want it, but there's very little pressure. Of course, now that I've written this column and blown the lid off the neighborhood secret, the charm will probably fade. So, if you're smart, you'll hop on down to Spasso before this neighborhood bar goes to the dogs. ❑

Bar & Club Listings

The following is a list of advertisers, plus some of the most popular nighttime establishments in the city. Please check times and prices in advance. If you'd like to have your bar or club listed, please call the Improper Bostonian Advertising Dept. at 232-3507.

General

Beacon Hill Pub
49 Charles St., Bos, A "scene straight out of Star Wars" reads the Worst of Boston award hanging on the wall. Anything goes at this popular Beacon Hill dive bar. Inside you'll find upscale Beacon Hill professionals mixing freely with members of skid row (not the band, mind you). The crowd is friendly and unpretentious. Thur.-Sat. college students abound. No cover. Free wings and dogs 4-7 p.m. weekdays.

Bull & Finch Pub (Cheers)
227-8665, 84 Beacon St., Bos, A recent study confirmed what many Bostonians have assumed for years: The Bull & Finch actually attracts more tourists than most of the sights on the Freedom Trail! The TV show Cheers uses the doorway of the Bull & Finch for their opening shot, but nothing else. Still, it offers a comfortable and boisterous neighborhood atmosphere. Try it at least once. No cover. Casual dress.

Cactus Club
236-0200, 939 Boylston St., Bos, Get sautéed, jelloed and bit with their firewater menu, including Aztec Tea (dark rum, lemonade and cranberry juice), Coyote Killer (light and dark rum, peach schnapps, ginger beer and mixed juices), or a Boa Constrictor (Malibu rum, white rum, banana liquor and fruit juice). Of course, you could always have a tangerine, raspberry, mango, strawberry or traditional margarita, and the daring can go for a dip in the Cactus Bowl. Full menu available at bar.

The Littlest Bar
523-9766, 47 Province St., Bos, Located near Downtown Crossing. A quick walk from the Orpheum Theatre. 10 customers, the two regulars who sit in the corner and sip their stouts, the bartender and cocktail waitress make up a full house in this charming little watering hole. Guinness and Rolling Rock are among the beers served on tap. Edibles also served. Hours are from 8:30 a.m.-12 a.m. Weekdays and Saturdays.

Market Place Cafe
227-9660, 300 Faneuil Hall Mkt., Bos, In a comfortable, relaxed area in Faneuil Hall, sit back and listen to the great sounds of the Brian Walkley Band with special guest Bruce Bartlett every Thursday at 8:30 p.m. Live music nightly during outdoor cafe season. Casual atmosphere and dress.

Province Street Pub
227-2992, 18 Province St., Bos, Located near downtown crossing, around the corner from the Parker House Hotel, is the new Province Street Pub. The pub has a lively atmosphere featuring a long U-shaped bar and loft dining room. Its central location attracts a mixed crowd of professionals, tourists and locals drawn by a varied live entertainment schedule. The pub is open 7 days a week till 2 a.m. and offers a brunch on weekends. $3 validated parking available. Open 11:30 to 2 a.m. Appetizers served until 1 a.m..

The Rowes Wharf Bar, Boston Harbor Hotel
439-3995. 70 Rowes Wharf, Boston.
"Tucked into the corner of the majestic Boston Harbor Hotel lies one of the best secrets in Boston..." The Improper Bostonian. Step into this cozy and inviting bar and try the house specialty of chicken pot pie with a most impressive selection of beers on draught, and one of Boston's finest selections of single malt scotches. Discover for yourself why chef Daniel Bruce has gained a reputation for his exquisite desserts. Also, lunch is served from 11:30am to 4pm.

Three Cheers Restaurant & Bar
290 Congress St., 423-6166
Located on Boston's scenic waterfront overlooking the historic Boston Tea Party Ship. Featuring Karaoke, comedy great music and more! When looking for a fun night out, don't miss the Mystery Café Dinner Theater. Function facilities, free parking. Just 1/4 of a block from the Children's and Computer Museums. Lunch Mon.-Sat. 11:30-4 p.m., Dinner Mon.-Sat. 4-11 p.m., Brunch Sun. 11 a.m.-3 p.m. Mystery Café Dinner Theater Wed., Thurs., Fri., 7 p.m.; Sat. 6 & 9 p.m., Sun. 6 p.m..

Dancing

Avalon
262-2424, 15 Lansdowne St., Bos, Boogie to Hip Hop, Funk, House, Progressive and Top 40 music at this colossal dance club. Music varies nightly. Take advantage of the enormous dance floor, placid lounge, and intimate booths. Avalon also boasts having the best light show in town. The crowd here is a good mix; anyone in the mood for dancing should feel comfortable. Cover charge varies. Dressy slacks, collared shirts, and dark dress shoes required. Great place to see live shows. Sun. night is gay night.

Avenue C
423-3832, 5 Boylston Pl., Bos, A chichi dance club located in the Theatre District across from the Common. Inside you'll find a mix of young professionals who arrive to meet, mix, mate, or just dance up a storm. Cover charge increases after 10 p.m., so arrive early. No jeans or collarless shirts. Progressive music Fri. & Sat. nights

Piano Rooms

Monday's Piano Bar
277-1200, Holiday Inn, 1200 Beacon St., Brookline. Casual dress, no cover. Experience live piano music at this cozy piano bar in the heart of Brookline. Entertainment from 8:30 p.m. Mondays, Diane Dexter. Tuesday and Friday, Lydia. Wednesday - Thursday, Tony Parker. Saturdays, Dottie Dean.

Breweries

Commonwealth Brewing Company
523-8383, 138 Portland St., Bos, "Let no man thirst for lack of real ale," is the motto at this micro-brewery and restaurant featuring glass walls so thirsty patrons can longingly observe the brewing process. The decor consists of copper tables, pipes and beer tanks. Approximately 10 English ales are served on tap as well as "Boston Burton Ale" served frosty cold in the bottle. Close proximity to the Boston Garden translates to before and after game crowds. Live Reggae and Calypso every Friday and Saturday Night 9:30 to 1 a.m.. Brewery tours are free, but sorry, this isn't the Molson factory. No samples. $3 Cover. Have dinner here and no cover.

Irish

Black Rose
742-2286, 160 State St., Bos, Live, traditional Irish music 7 days and an atmosphere that thrives on patron participation characterize this Faneuil Hall bar whose name is a symbol of Irish Catholic repression by the British. The food is home spun and the beer, well... Irish. The upbeat crowd is composed of students, professionals, locals etc. and they all get involved in the show. Beware, people will know your status by stealing a glance at your claddaugh ring! Moderate cover weekends. Casual dress.

The Green Briar
304 Washington St., Brighton 789-4100
Stop in and say "HI" to Rocky; one of the colorful characters that serve to recreate a wee bit of the old sod here in the promised land. We have entertainment Wednesday - Monday. Featuring some of Boston's best bands - Monday nights; Boston's Best Irish Session - Wednesday nights; "Karaoke" prizes and giveaways. Catch all the big games here! The Green Briar also features hearty home cooked meals and a terrific Sunday Brunch. Open 7 days until 1am. Casual dress. Cover varies. T: #57 bus from Kenmore.

The Harp at the Garden
85 Causeway St., Boston, 742-1010
Party and dance at Boston's Newest Hotspot! The Harp pleases all music lovers' tastes with rock, reggae, jazz, progressive, and, of course, Irish. We have entertainment Wed-Sun. After-work parties on Thurs. and Fri. with live entertainment and free appetizers. Featuring some of Boston's Biggest and Best Bands! Come see Boston's newest sensation—Tim Crandall "the one man band" playing Wed 7:30-10:30 and Friday Happy Hour 5-8. Food served until midnight. Pulling Boston's Best Guinness and offering weekly drink specials. Cover varies. North Station stop on the Green Line.

Kinvara Pub
34 Harvard Ave., Allston, 783-9400,
If you are looking for a happening place with an Irish pub flavor, the Kinvara Pub is the place to be. The pub features some of Boston's hottest acts where dancing is the norm. Live bands Wed-Sun. Sun. night - DJ Tom. Feast your eyes on our sumptuous dinner specials and appetizers, served until midnight. There is a wide assortment of bottled and draft beer, but the Guiness shouldn't be missed. Open 7 days a week until 2am and ample parking in rear. Casual dress.

O'Leary's
734 -0049, 1010 Beacon Street, Brookl. If the vast selection of both tap and bottled beers here isn't enough to tempt you, let the warm look and feel of a traditional Irish pub lure you in. The crowd is fun-loving, the atmosphere comfortable and dress is casual. Always a guaranteed good time.

End of Summer Festivities

Don Henley & Co., Cajun and Bluegrass Festival, Decordova Jazz and more.

The summer's only show at Foxboro Stadium boasts quite a lineup to help save threatened woodlands once frequented by naturalist Henry David Thoreau. The Concert for Walden Woods, taking place on Labor Day, features hour-long sets by Elton John, Sting and benefit organizer Don Henley, as well as a cameo performance by Boston's own Aerosmith. But don't overlook the program's opening rocker, Melissa Etheridge, who is slated to kick off the benefit at 5 p.m.

Etheridge is a dynamic live performer who should have no trouble winning over new fans in a stadium setting with her hearty, raspy vocals and soul-searching style. Look for her to turn heads.

The concert, by the way, is expected to raise about $1 million to help pay off a loan used in the $3.5 million purchase of land near Walden Pond.

CAJUN & BLUEGRASS FESTIVAL

A more traditional Labor Day event is the 14th Annual Cajun & Bluegrass Festival at the Stepping Stone Ranch in rural Escoheag, R.I. The fest runs Friday night and both day and night Saturday and Sunday. Among those performing Saturday and Sunday are D.L. Menard & the Lousiana Aces, the Tony Rice Unit, Steve Riley & the Mamou Playboys, Walter Mouton & the Scott Playboys, the Austin Lounge Lizards and the Poullard Brothers Creole Band. The Iguanas and local bluegrass favorites Northern Lights help kick off the Friday evening program. But for many, the highlight of the weekend comes after the night's main-stage performances, with social dances in the ranch barn and outdoor tent. Mouton (who finally played the festival last year after more than 20 years of Saturday nights at the same Louisiana dancehall) and Riley will respectively churn up the barn Saturday and Sunday, while Nathan & the Zydeco Cha-Chas will cook in the tent.

Speaking of cooking, the Festival offers authentic cuisine, such as blackened fish, chicken and even alligator, as well as jambalaya, red beans and rice. Tickets are in the $20 range per day, and camping is available with a three-day ticket. Children under 12 are admitted free!

"It's a great festival, man," says veteran Menard, who's known as the "Cajun Hank Williams." Of the festival's organizers, who also do the Big Easy Bash on the ranch in June, Menard, on the phone from Louisiana, says "They put their heart into it."

DECORDOVA JAZZ FESTIVAL

While Henley and his compatriots are preparing to help save land near Walden Pond, the nearby DeCordova Museum in Lincoln will present its annual Labor Day Jazz Festival at its outdoor amphitheater, which happens to provide the best outdoor concert setting you'll find in the Boston area.

This year's festival of locally based jazz talent features the Latin septet El Eco, former Full Circle vocalist Philip Hamilton's new Group and the Brad Hatfield Quintet, which includes trumpeter Tiger Okoshi and saxophonist George Garzone. The three-hour concert begins at 1 p.m.

ELSEWHERE

Another Labor Day option for those who are more adventurous would be a trip to the Saratoga Performing Arts Center in Saratoga Springs, N.Y. That's the closest stop to Boston for the first U.S. tour of the WOMAD Festival, a decade-old celebration of international music supported by Peter Gabriel. Gabriel, PM Dawn, Crowded House, Stereo MCs, John Trudell and Jah Wobble are among western acts who will be joined by a huge cast of superstars from China, Russia, Africa and many other locations.

And Parrotheads can't forget that Jimmy Buffett and his Coral Reefer Band party down at Great Woods Thursday through Saturday to launch the holiday weekend. Let's just hope the weather holds out like the concerts do.

Freelance writer/photographer Paul Robicheau has covered music for more than a decade. He is a Boston correspondent for Rolling Stone magazine and his features and reviews appear regularly in the Boston Globe. ❑

Tortured no Longer

An Introduction to Benjamin Britten (part 1)

Though his themes are pacifism and innocence, Benjamin Britten's music is often considered harsh and ironic. His most famous works project grim, grotesque images of war and isolation; even his charming song cycles have a tang of that bitterness that Britten shared with friend and collaborator W. H. Auden. Several new recordings just released this month, however, present a very different view of Britten. They present an image of the composer playing comfortably with the lyrical traditions of the past, producing music that is witty, pleasant, and wholly affectionate.

Two of the works released this month on CD have never been previously recorded in their entirety. Britten's royal opera Gloriana, composed for the coronation of Elizabeth II, floundered after its first performance met with cool reception – the first audience was appalled that Britten's portrait of Elizabeth I could be so tastelessly homely and human. Mackerras's new recording (Argo 440 213-2) still shocks (with Josephine Barstow playing a Queen capable of extraordinary vulgarity as well as much-celebrated nobility); however, this new recording also reminds us that much of the work really is triumphal and ceremonial, vivid with fanfares and lively masquing dances. It really is an honest appreciation of the monarchy.

Argo has also just released the first complete recording of Britten's Beggar's Opera (Argo 436 850-2), a work based, like Brecht and Weill's Three-Penny Opera, on an 18th century musical by John Gray. Britten doesn't concentrate on the play's social commentary, as the German duo did, but instead focuses on bringing out the charm of the original baroque show tunes through the use of some very handsome 'forties harmonies. The work is light, but not insubstantial. Just when we think Britten is about to turn London's under-world into a tea-dance, he delivers some delightfully Hogarthian piece of debauchery.

Britten also pays tribute to an earlier age of English music in his otherworldly opera A Midsummer Night's Dream. For Britten, as for Henry Purcell, the emphasis in the Shakespeare play lies not on that hopelessly confusing love square, but instead on the imagery of darkness, sleep, and the supernatural. Each set of characters in the opera therefore becomes deliriously extreme; the four lovers, always anxious and bickering; the clumsily dissonant rustics; the sticky-sweet fairy boys of Tytania's entourage; and winding them all in the coils of dream, strange falsetto Oberon and his rogue Puck. Hickox's new recording (Virgin 7-59305-2) is lusher than Britten's own (London 425 663-2), and can certainly compete with it.

Britten was once seen as somewhat glib and popular; now he's often seen as boy-haunted and shackled by self-hate. It's works like these that demonstrate he was obviously fully able to produce affecting, lyrical music without touching on obsession. Of course, he doubtless was boy-haunted and shackled by self-hate, but he was too polite to say so often. And so should we be. ❑

Now through July 3, 1994, see "African and Oceanic Sculpture," with over 44 sculptures and masks from west and central Africa, along with some from the South Pacific. Through Sept. 26, see "Building a Collection: The Department of Contemporary Art, Part 2." Call 267-9300.

Museum of Science
Science Park, Boston
Come see "Backyard Monsters," an exhibition dedicated to bugs. Watch humongous (20 feet tall!) carpenter ants, a praying mantis, a black widow and a unicorn beetle — all are robotically animated. Many other creepy-crawlies are on display, and you can even build your own ant! Through Sept. 12. Also, on exhibit through Sept. 19 is "Science in Toyland," where visitors can discover how toys and play can introduce children (and adults!) to science. Lots of fun stuff to play with, no matter what age you are. Free admission Wednesdays from 1-5 p.m. during the school year, except during school vacations. Call 589-0270.

Museum of Transportation
Larz Anderson Park
15 Newton St., Brookline
Located in an 1889 castle-style carriage house, this museum highlights the impact of the automobile on American society. On view now are "Muscle Cars," hot rods of American engineering that were created between 1964-74. On Sept. 9, renowned diner historian and restorer Richard J.S. Gutman will be signing his new book, American Diner, Then and Now, from 7:30-9:30 p.m. Gutman will also present a slideshow on the subject; tickets are $20, which include a copy of the book and admission to the "Muscle Cars" exhibit. Call 522-6547.

New England Aquarium
Central Wharf, Boston
The Aquarium's newest exhibit is called "Catch Some Rays," about the mysterious – and dangerous – sting ray family of fish. Meet the denizens of the water world, including divers who hand-feed sharks, plus daily sea lion performances. Also, see the new expanded tidepool! Call 973-5200.

New England Sports Museum
Cambridgeside Galleria, Cambridge
The Sox last won the World Series in 1918 - ancient history, huh? Well, it's actually not that long ago in the scope of the NESM. This place has everything that has anything to do with New England sports, including lots of interactive exhibits - like one where you can catch a pitch thrown by Roger Clemens. The best thing is that it's open the same hours as the mall, so you can go on a weeknight and have the place all to yourself.

Old State House
206 Washington St., Boston
This State House, built in 1713, is Boston's oldest public building. Permanent exhibits explore the city's history since the Revolution; a special exhibit on display now explores Boston's former West End neighborhood. Admission to the building is $2. Call 720-1713.

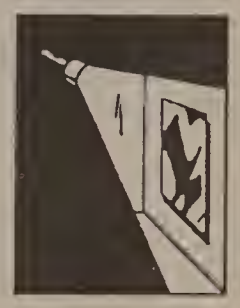
Paul Revere House
19 North Square, North End
Built in 1680, the Revere House is the only surviving building from 17th century Boston. Paul Revere lived there from 1770 to 1800. Call 523-2338.

The USS Constitution Museum
Charlestown Navy Yard
Located 200 yards from "Old Ironsides," the museum is dedicated to interpreting the ship's nearly 200-year history. Call 426-1812.

THEATER

American Repertory Theatre
Loeb Drama Center
64 Brattle St., Harvard Square
We promise, you'll be able to see it. The ART presents Le Cirque Invisible (that's "The Invisible Circus" for the completely language-deficient) through Sept. 6. It's a mix of comedy, acrobatics, animal acts, magic and sheer theatricality; tickets range from $18-$42, with special discounts for kids under. From Sept. 7-19, see Time on Fire, a "raucous romp through hell" that details a man's often hilarious experiences as he tries to cope with the medical establishment. Call 547-8300.

Asian American Theater Project
Boston Center for the Arts
539 Tremont St., Boston
The tale of a concubine who wins her freedom in a poker game is one of the poignant stories told in Unbinding Our Lives, a play that traces the lives of Chinese women during the Gold Rush era. (Sept. 8-11, 15-18, 22-25, at 8 p.m. in the Leland Center.) Also, see the story of a Japanese-American family at an internment camp during WWII in Living in Infamy. (Sept. 12, 19 & 26 at 2 p.m. in Leland Center.) Call 426-ARTS.



Charles Playhouse
76 Warrenton St., Boston
You're in for a toe-tapping night during this retrospective of country music singer Patsy Cline's work, with a celebrity guest D.J. every night. A Closer Walk with Patsy Cline is now performing until Sept. 12. Call 426-6912.

Charles Playhouse
74 Warrenton St., Boston
Acknowledged by the Guinness Book of World Records as the longest-running, non-musical play in U.S. history, Shear Madness is continuing its run at the Charles Playhouse. Set in the city in which it plays, Shear Madness allows the audience to become sleuths and solve the murder mystery. Call 426-5225.

Huntington Theatre Co.
264 Huntington Ave., Boston
Learn about the extraordinary experiences of an African-American woman growing up in the deep South in the HTC's production of From the Mississippi Delta. Performances run Sept. 10-Oct. 10; call 266-0800.

Medieval Manor
246 E. Berkeley St., Boston
Combining the bawdy tradition of burlesque vaudeville with aspects of "Dark Ages" dining, this satiric musical transports its audience back to a comedic castle cabaret. There is no silverware for the six-course meal, customers have to raise their hands to leave the room, and everyone must pay homage to the king. Call 423-4900.

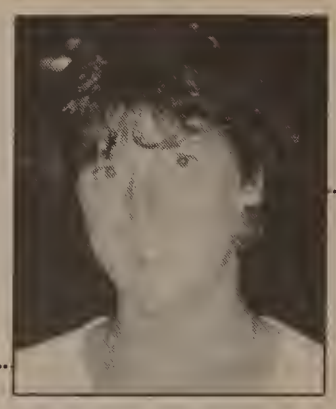
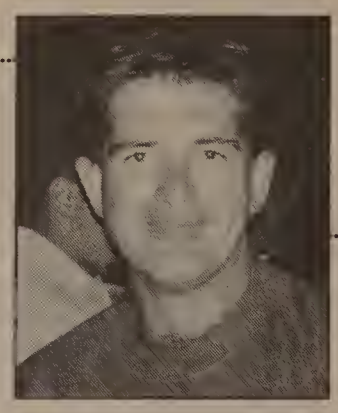
WOMAN ON THE STREET

BY LESLIE



"What was your worst high school subject?"



Cheryl, 29, East Boston
"Science. I never quite caught on and I felt like I was two steps behind everyone."

Dave, 34, Watertown
"French. I was always listening to how sexy it sounded, but not bothering to understand a word of it."

Claire, 32, Quincy
"Math or Chemistry. I always had male teachers and they always favored the guys."

Steve, 29, Brockton
"Swimming class. We had to wear those speedos and I was 30 lbs. overweight."

Cornelius, 22, Fenway
"Math, because it was usually first period, and I could never get up for it."

Amy, 23, Newton
"Driver's Education. Everything went downhill after I rammed into a police car."

M.I.T.
Student Center
Opposite 77 Mass. Ave., Cambridge
The M.I.T. Gilbert and Sullivan Players are hosting auditions for The Pirates of Penzance Sept. 12 in Room 491, and on Sept. 13 in Private Dining Room #1. Bring a prepared song. Call 730-8214.

MYSTERY CAFE
290 Congress St., Boston
To celebrate its 5th year, the Mystery Cafe presents Murder at Rick's Cafe and Let's Kill the Boss. Tickets, which include a four course dinner plus the show are $29-$33 and are available at Bostix or by phone at 262-1826.

NEW REPERTORY THEATRE
54 Lincoln St., Newton Highlands
Tickets are now on sale for the New Rep's '93-'94 season, which begins with a production of Jar the Floor from Sept. 16-Oct. 24. It's a tender, funny story of four generation of women in an African-American family preparing for the great-grandmother's 90th birthday. Call 332-1646.

NORTH SHORE MUSIC THEATRE
62 Dunham Rd., Beverly
Nagging wives, whining children, mothers-in-law and food will be the main topics in the award-winning Catskills on Broadway, four Catskills comedians performing their unique brand of Jewish humor. But they are only doing two shows: Sept. 5 at 3 & 8 p.m. Tickets are $35.50. Also, from Sept. 2-18, the NSMT presents the classic musical Brigadoon, a love story about a magical town that emerges from the mists of Scotland just one day each century. Call (508) 922-8500.

RIVERSIDE THEATRE WORKS
French's Opera House
45 Fairmount Ave., Hyde Park
The RTW presents Guys and Dolls, the musical about gangsters, gambling, long engagements, and innocent missionaries. From Sept. 9-Oct. 30 at 8 p.m.; cocktail hour begins at 7 p.m. Tickets are $12 for adults, $10 for seniors and $8 for students. Call 361-7024.

TERRACE ROOM
Park Plaza Hotel, Boston
Forever Plaid, a musical hit about a group's second chance at stardom, is continuing their stint at the Park Plaza Hotel's Terrace Room. Legal Seafood dinner/show packages are $52 and $49. For times, prices and reservations, call 357-8384.

THEATRE LOBBY
216 Hanover St., Boston
Those zany nuns from Nunsense have taken up residence at the Theatre Lobby in Boston's North End. The Little Sisters of Hoboken can now be seen with a brand new cast and set. Special restaurant/theatre packages are available with the European Restaurant. For more information on dinner packages, call 227-9872. For times and prices, call Ticketmaster at (800) 382-8080.

UNDERGROUND RAILWAY THEATER
Boston Center for the Arts
539 Tremont St., Boston
The URT takes a look at both the humorous and serious sides of the 50-something crowd in Washed-Up Middle-Aged Women. In the Black Box Theater Sept. 9-11, 16-18 and 23-25 at 8 p.m. ASL performance Sept. 11. Call 426-ARTS.

UNION CHAPEL
Oak Bluffs, Martha's Vineyard
Harlem Exchange chronicles the correspondence between two African-American men from the Vietnam era to today. Shows are Sept. 2-5 at 8 p.m.; tickets are $15. Call (508) 693-3808.

WANG CENTER
270 Tremont St., Boston
Of course, the hottest ticket in the theater district this summer will be for Miss Saigon, the tragic love story of an American G.I. and the Vietnamese woman he left in Saigon. It's a must-see, but it's only here until Oct. 9. Call 931-2222.

LECTURES/READINGS

M.I.T.
Bartos Theater
20 Ames St., Cambridge
The poetry season opens Sept. 13 at 7:30 p.m. with a reading by W.S. Merwin. Poets may read both their own works and works that have influenced them. Call 253-7894.

NATIONAL ORGANIZATION FOR WOMEN
Harriet Tubman House
566 Columbus Ave., Boston
NOW is a non-profit organization dedicated to fighting sexism, racism and homophobia, and fighting for the advancement of the rights of all women. Come to an open house Sept. 14 at 7 p.m. to find out how you can involved. Call 782-1056.

WORDSWORTH BOOKS
Brattle Theatre
40 Brattle St., Harvard Square
Anti-pornography lawyer and activist Catharine MacKinnon talks about her hard-hitting book on free speech and the First Amendment, Only Words, Sept. 7 at 5:30 p.m. Admission is free, but you must have a ticket, available from Wordsworth or the Brattle. Canned goods are collected at the door for the Cambridge Food Pantry. Call 354-5201.

GALLERIES

GALLERY 659
Jamaica Plain Arts Center
659 Centre Street, JP
Gallery 659 presents the works of four South American artists from Sept. 8-29; opening reception is Sept. 10 at 6:30 p.m., and there will be a concert of Andean music by Inca Son. Call 524-3816.

GALLERY NAGA
67 Newbury St., Boston
NAGA presents "New Paintings of Boston" by Ed Stitt, a young realist painter whose depictions of Boston buildings - both famous and mundane - would make you swear it was a photograph. Also on view are works by Elizabeth Rosenblum on the theme "Pathologizing Desire." From Sept. 7 to Oct. 2.

ROLLY-MICHAUX
290 Dartmouth St., Boston
Robert Sweeney, a professor of fine arts at Amherst College, is noted for his luminist views of New England. This exhibition (Sept. 14-Oct. 16) features scenes of the hills and small villages of western Mass., as well as the flower-strewn fields and marshlands along the Connecticut shoreline.

SPECIAL EVENTS

BOOK FAIR
Old Cambridge Baptist Church
1151 Mass. Ave, Harvard Square
Find used and nearly-new books on all subjects at bargain basement prices on Sept. 11 from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Money goes to help Sojourner: The Women's Forum. Call 524-0415 to donate books.

CODMAN HOUSE
Codman Road, Lincoln
Handmade jewelry, baskets, quilts, pottery and toys will be among the many crafts represented at the 11th Annual Artisans' Fair on the grounds of historic Codman House on Sept. 12 from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. The house is accessible by Commuter Rail and admission is $3; call 259-8843.

GREEK FESTIVAL
71 Chandler Rd., Andover
Sts. Constantine and Helen Greek Orthodox Church sponsor a three-day Greek Festival Sept. 10 (4-11 p.m.), 11 (11 a.m. to 11 p.m.) and 12 (11 a.m. to 6 p.m.), rain or shine. Greek music and dancing, food, arts and crafts and a Greek agora (marketplace) will be the focus of the event. Call 508-470-0919.

RACE FOR THE CURE
Daly Field, Brighton
The Race is a 5K run/walk near the Charles River, and money raised goes to provide mammogram screening for medically under-served women in Boston. It's Sept. 11 from 9 a.m. to noon; entry fee is $15, $16 the day of the race. Call 738-4000 x2862.

VOLUNTEER FAIR
Hynes Convention Center
Boylston Street, Boston
More than 100 non-profit organizations will set up shop here between noon and 4 p.m. Sept. 11 to recruit warmhearted people like yourself to volunteer for them. Admission is $5; the keynote address will be delivered by Eli Segal, assistant to President Clinton and director of the Office of National Service. Call 547-6979.

CLASSICAL

CORO ALLEGRO
Church of the Covenant
67 Newbury St., Boston

FESTIVAL OF SHORT FILMS
Somerville Theater
55 Davis Square
The 2nd annual International Festival of Short Films runs Sept. 3-12; it's a two-hour collection of 11 live-action short films from five countries, including Oscar winner Work Experience from England and Gus Van Sant's and William Burroughs's masterful Thanksgiving Prayer. Tickets are $7, $5 for the 4 p.m. shows. Call 1-800-925-CINE.

LASERIUM
At the Museum of Science
Science Park, Boston
In the tradition of Lollapalooza, the annual alternative rock concert extravaganza, the museum presents the Lollapalaser show every Friday & Saturday at 8 p.m. - a combination of lasers and music from groups like Living Colour, Jane's Addiction, and the Red Hot Chili Peppers. Other music themes are on other days; call 723-2500.

MUSEUM OF SCIENCE
Mugar Omni Theatre
Science Park, Boston
New to the world of Omnimax is Grand Canyon: The Hidden Secrets, which runs through Oct. 14. For the more tropically-oriented, Omni treats you to Tropical Rainforest, a film that traces the evolution - and destruction - of one of nature's most important creations. Call 723-2500; ticket purchase 24 hours in advance is advised.

WORLD TRADE CENTER
Northern Ave., Boston
Check out The Other Side: A Virtual Reality Arena at the World Trade Center. Tickets are $7; some rides and attractions are extra. It's the largest gathering of virtual reality entrepreneurs this summer. Call 1-800-367-9822 or 439-5000.

ROCKIE HOROSCOPE

BY ROCKIE GARDINER — SEPTEMBER 1 – SEPTEMBER 14, 1993

GENERAL FORECAST (If you know your ascendant, read it too.)

Hope springs eternal – another NFL season, another zillion reasons to believe your/my team will triumph. While Mercury trines the unpredictable Uranus-Neptune conjunction this weekend, all manner of miracles are possible, all explanations seem plausible. But the news is probably just a setup for the slam-bam, headbanger of a Mars-Jupiter conjunction on Sunday, a whoop-de-do war cry to accompany truly dangerous enthusiasms. It's also a precursor of the militant Mars square to the weird Uranus-Neptune combo on the 9th. Perhaps we'll see more (smart) bombs bursting in air, more divisiveness among separatist factions all over the planet, maybe we'll get a signal from the Mars Observer lost (Neptune) in space (Uranus). While these are among the most challenging, erratic and otherworldly aspects we've been hit with in a while, enduring them with a modicum of grace can result in substantial rewards. Next Friday the Virgo sun trines that troublesome Capricorn duo so we may actually see some progress, perhaps a resolution that'll last longer than a minute. Labor Day itself should be fairly quiet, a well-deserved respite from the slings, arrows and pipe bombs coming every which way. Enjoy.

ARIES (MARCH 20-APRIL 19)

You're easily influenced by your mate's optimism, your public's enthusiasm or your lawyer's talent for tipping the scales of justice. Balance is the lesson of the day. As your Mars ruler meets expansive, expensive Jupiter in Libra, the sign of significant relationships, you won't be able to restrain yourself by yourself. In fact, there's hardly a thing you can do solo except attack the fluctuating forces affecting current career choices. Don't go off half-cocked. Have a plan and a partner in crime.

TAURUS (APRIL 20-MAY 20)

While other signs may be awash in kookiness and confusion this week, the brave bull manages to succeed by saying what needs to be said and doing, sometime next Friday, what comes naturally. There might be trouble with co-workers and foreigners, but their antagonisms don't have to become yours. Stay on a safe and sane track, create to the best of your artistic abilities – there'll be ample opportunity – and you'll be rewarded, if not financially, then by attaining a purely personal goal.

GEMINI (MAY 21-JUNE 20)

The usual tension, a seasonal event, that occurs when your Mercury ruler passes through picky Virgo can propel you out on the road, to the health food market or into the files in search of accurate, practical information. Trading in knowledge can also have financial benefits, particularly if you dig into insurance and investment matters. There are a few drawbacks: you're liable to push beyond normal limitations, bet more than you should or play around with reckless abandon. Watch it.

CANCER (JUNE 21-JULY 22)

The Pisces full moon, Tuesday's blue moon, is still weaving its magic spell, making you dreamy, ditzy and strangely susceptible to others' suggestions. Strong aspects to your erratic partnership scene can put you at the mercy of his or her whim. Mercifully, money matters go well, but what passes for domestic tranquillity at your house can disappear when macho Mars pushes buttons, shortens fuses and wields a knife next Thursday. Try to keep a sense of proportion, avoid megalomaniacs and their mammoth projects.

LEO (JULY 23-AUGUST 22)

Your neighborhood may be a hotbed of activity this weekend – part entertainment, part enterprise. One gung-ho cheerleader on the block or an overly optimistic sibling can further upset a shaky work and health scene, but even if you're pressed to undertake more than you really care to, do it. Next Friday, when your sun ruler benefits from those unstable conditions, you'll profit financially from this week's excess. On a personal note – beautify the bod, reshape the lion's mane. Venus is in Leo, love is stalking you.

VIRGO (AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22)

This week could turn out to be the high point of the Virgo Experience, a multi-media event celebrating your creative talents and personable personality. Because your Mercury ruler is supported by the weird and wondrous, wild and wacky Uranus-Neptune conjunction, you find order in what others call chaos. And, of course, have a perfectly wonderful time doing so. On the other hand, money-making matters should be handled gingerly since the tendency is to leap way before you remember to look. Some can stomach the thrill, some virgins can't.

LIBRA (SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22)

How much motivation does it take? The incredible energy generated by the ambitious Mars-Jupiter conjunction in your sign can launch a rocket, an innovative project or a philosophical imperative. How much luckier can you get? Jupiter may be raising ethical standards to new heights, but courageous Mars provides the heart and balls to pursue and achieve your current goals. The folks at home may resent your pontificating, but if they've given you nothing but problems lately, stop trying to pacify them.

SCORPIO (OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21)

Most of the machinations and motivations are hidden this week, so unless you're working behind the scenes yourself, you might not realize just how much power is being exerted on your behalf. Next week, when old friends and siblings are more open about their actions, you'll see how the story of your current event unfolded. Meanwhile, the gossip is juicy, the neighbors are freaky, but fascinating, and if you don't piss one of them off, you'll have a fine time this weekend. Just don't fly next Thursday.

SAGITTARIUS (NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21)

Informative, idealistic and irrational. The news from the top (boss, government, parent) can assuage a tricky financial scene just days before friends upset it. Don't leap at the first bait dangled before you this weekend. Values are fluctuating, money matters seem to be charting their own course, and all you can reasonably do is maintain your balance (holding on to the Libra/Libium in your life?) until next Friday. That's when the career/cash payoff should come in. Please, no manic episode to mark the event.

CAPRICORN (DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20)

Another milestone of a week, with an exciting, borderline scary, career offer on one hand and an impressive intellectual reward on the other. Grab them both because this sort of opportunity comes around only once every 12 years. The ride will be ebullient and extravagant, but don't for a minute assume you can maintain control of the scene, much less yourself. The aspects to the planets in Capricorn are too erratic, too fantastic for the well-chosen word. Nonetheless, a far-out publishing/teaching project is a real possibility.

AQUARIUS (JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18)

Although the world sees your friendly, as opposed to fierce, facade most of the time, there are moments, like the ones that'll arise this week, when you can lose your cool in one frantic second. As first mercurial Mercury and then impulsive Mars aspect your Uranus ruler, any little thing can throw you off stride. Remember this when you feel your blood boil for no apparent reason. And be careful with machinery, sharp objects and steely-eyed foreigners. What you don't know, who you're not familiar with, can hurt you.

PISCES (FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19)

Obsession. The Calvin Klein days are here again. First you'll get the message, words from a loved one that'll put you on better terms with friends and colleagues. But when meddlesome Mars squares your Neptune ruler next Thursday, the madness sets in. Delusions about sex, power and money should be kept to yourself, otherwise the self-same buddies could freak. On the plus side, this planetary aspect invents an imaginative horror story line, a fantastic opera, a romantic, ridiculous ad campaign.

Shear Wonder

When the leaves start to fall, the body and soul begin to yearn for scrumptious containers of warmth. The very definition of warmth is wool, and the veriest essence of that is sheepskin, whose many permutations from Australia and New Zealand are available at the Shearing Shed. Babies, in their unwitting slumber, are big consumers of the natural buttery-yellow (and safely made) Babycare lambskin. Perfect for sleeping on, face up or face down, in the crib or car, it's machine-washable (with Ivory, of course). In case you're not a baby but like the fleeciness, the Shearing Shed has all sorts of fluffy adult things, such as sheepskin rugs. Another big seller, even in the summer, for their cooling and anti-dampening properties, are car seats made of Australian Merino. Available in universal, fit-all-cars styles, the seats can be ordered custom-made, too. To complete the car outfit, check out the big furry steering-wheel covers—with sheepskin back-soothers. And, to make everything harsh more melting, there's even a seat-belt cover. The Shearing Shed has a sheepskin to cover your mattress, and when you drag yourself out of it to use the exercise bike, there's a sheepskin to soften the Puritanically harsh ride. Trappers hats that flap and Velcro into a range of looks, and women's versions (black and forest green are the rising colors) are big items, along with furry footwear for all.

From Shoddy to Shod in Three Minutes

Does the subway grating take its chomp out of your heel? Bricks and irregular sidewalks do it—constantly. Rather than going shoeless for a day, or even for an hour, you can bring your pumps, flats or men's shoes into the friendly Heel Quik! shop, a large version of a hole in the wall. It does full-service everything for shoes; its lightning heel gentrifications take about three minutes, and you're off ($4.40 for what Heel Quik! politely terms ladies; $8.75 for men). Customers, many of them regulars, stream in and out all the time. Some are here for stitching or for anchoring the "kilt" of leather floppies that are on some men's shoes; others come here for a protective sole, a thin layer of Cat's Paw or similar material that extends the life of a new pair of shoes, which also helps with non-slipping and waterproofing ($14 for ladies, $18 for men's shoes). Protective soles come with a lifetime guarantee. Andy, Heel Quik!'s shoe man, won second place for shoe repair in all of North America, and in valet mode, Heel Quik!'s Executive Office Service will pick up, repair and return shoes to offices in Boston. What to do while waiting oh so un-long? Smiling Bill Riley, whose partner is his daughter Lisa, is forever ringing up lottery and scratch tickets for customers and selling shoe-stretchers, polishes, etc. A sign outside compares the weight and woe of a 120-pound woman walking on high heels with the equivalent degree of force of a steel hammer. In four months, she would ram a hole a mile deep. So, it's no surprise the clipping-along woman has shoes in need of repair—often.

It's a Dog's Life

Almost like a novel starring dogs, this little book, written by anthropologist/novelist Elizabeth Marshall Thomas, plunges you into the doings and, yes, the feelings of dogs. Maybe the last time you read a dog book was in childhood, and to get you back there, The Hidden Life of Dogs has appealing canine drawings by Jared T. Williams at the start of each chapter. Like a curious stalker, Thomas followed her dogs during their very wide-ranging trottings through Cambridge and beyond (one of them had a 160-square-mile beat), studying their customs, relationships, and the ballet of their motions and sensations as writ in ears, tail, body postures and peeing behaviors. At home, she and her family cohabitated with between six and eight dogs, which formed a society as complex, differentiated and exciting as the world of a multigenerational novel. Two dogs produced litters at the same time, and one mother—in a horrifyingly fascinating scene—murders the puppies of the other. Thomas demonstrates, using intimate details that echo the book's drawings, the great power of the pack, of friendship and of company among dogs (they want that far more than we might know) and the importance of the alpha animal in the dogocracy. You'll be surprised to see how affecting this canine domestic anthropology can be; tenderly objective in its writing, the book may also make you cry.

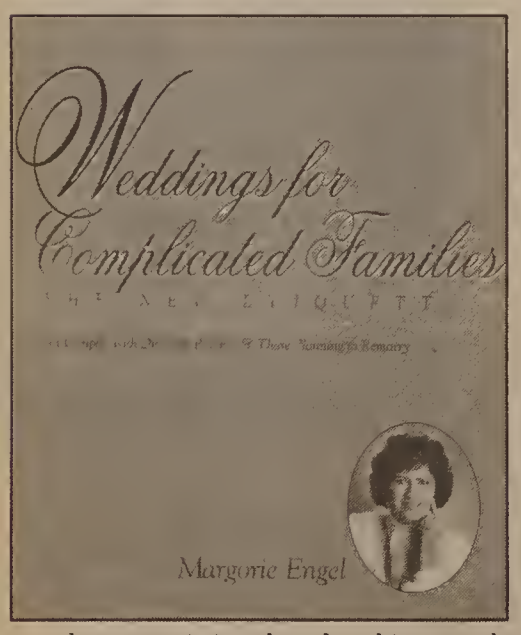
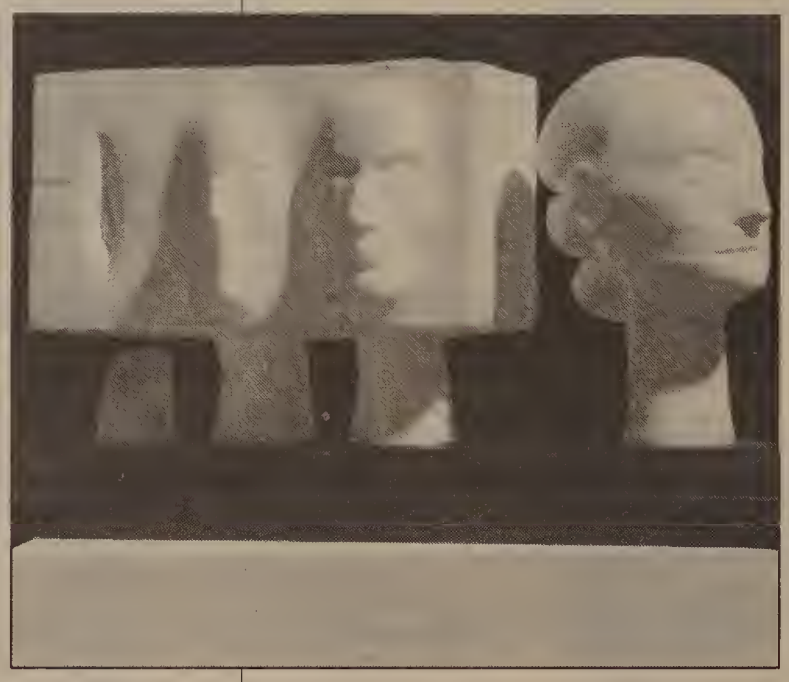
WHAT'S HOT IN BOSTON NOW



VIDEO

Groundhog Day, starring Bill Murray and Andie MacDowell; Murray ended a stellar year at the box office playing a TV weatherman mysteriously condemned to experience Groundhog Day over and over until he gets it right. Running amuck and misusing his new power, Murray's character takes manipulation to new and hysterical heights before he stumbles upon his conscience.

BOOK



Weddings for Complicated Families: The New Etiquette by Marjorie Engel (Mt. Ivy Press, $14.95). These days, the modern wedding doesn't involve throwing the bouquet, it involves breaking up the fistfight. For the young couple, divorced parents can make wedding plans a trifle more complicated than Steel Magnolias. Here in the nineties, half of all marriages end in divorce, but Engel's book replaces the anxiety replaces the anxiety with ease and tackles questions much more complicated than "what color does a non-virginal bride wear?"

TELEVISION

Censorship: Sense or [expletive], Cambridge Community Television. In his cable-access show, Cambridge musician Stephen Funk Pearson probes the question of censorship and never fails to smash the boundaries of network-broadcast standards. Although highlights include explicit clips from other countries and censored bits from movies aired on TV, Funk's program is not meant for sensationalist gawkers, but for free-thinking viewers concerned with the inconsistent policies of media censors.

ART

Elbert Weinberg 1928-1991: A Retrospective Exhibition, Boston University Art Gallery, through Oct. 31. Best known for his Jewish subjects (Holocaust memorials in Hartford, Conn., and Wilmington, Del.) Weinberg had been a valued member of the faculty at Boston University. For the first time since his death in 1991, an exhibition features his best-known sculpture, which spans a period of more than 30 years.

EXERCISE

Cardio-boxing. Gaining popularity across the country, this new aerobic and anaerobic exercise is finally catching on in Boston. Introduced only a year ago at the Beacon Hill Athletic Club, 261 Friend St., Boston, 720-2422, cardio-boxing is relieving the stress and ridding the flesh of many Bostonians. Following the training procedures of professional boxers, members jab punching bags, jump rope and hone their punching skills with the staff's golden-glove teachers. Women are finding the exercise especially beneficial since it builds upper-body muscles and teaches self-defense skills. The instructors' constructive intimidation makes burning calories fun and challenging.

ANIMATION

Spike and Mike's Sick and Twisted Festival of Animation, Coolidge Corner Theater, through Oct. 24. Forever pushing the envelope of political correctness or even good taste, Spike and Mike bring another 18-and-over show to Boston for your viewing pleasure. Gear up for old favorites like the two uncensored Beavis and Butthead episodes and drop your jaw for this year's new and truly tasteless (but accurate) rips on contemporary media and the American beauty myth. Watch Chainsaw Bob in his version of the Waco compound fire and Puke a Pound, a satire of modern weight-loss programs. Call 734-2500 for show times.

RECORDING

Nirvana, In Utero. Fans everywhere have long awaited the follow-up CD from the alternative act that rushed mainstream music's gate two years ago. Now after months of controversy with its record company, DGC, Nirvana is ready to reclaim the throne or fade into one-hit-wonder obscurity. But never fear, In Utero is packed with all the disgust, anger and character of its predecessor. Who would want it any other way?

BENEFIT

Boston Designer's Collaborative/New England School of Photography's Fashion Plate, NESOP Gallery, 537 Kenmore Square, Oct. 8 through Nov. 12. Boston's finest designers have teamed up with Boston's finest photographers to present an exhibit intended to benefit Boston's fashion/arts community. Admission is free, and a number of photographs and fashions themselves will be raffled off, with the proceeds going towards the BDC scholarship fund.

BOSTON'S BLUES BREAKOUT

Newfound Audience and Business Boom Put the Hub on the Blues Map

By Paul Robicheau

"The roadhouse is jumpin' all night long," guitarist Rick Russell is singing onstage at Johnny D's Uptown in Somerville, and the dance-happy crowd is chanting the rejoinder "All night long!"

But Johnny D's isn't the only place celebrating the blues on this Saturday night. Over at House of Blues in Harvard Square, Luther "Guitar Jr." Johnson is stirring up a well-oiled crowd with his Chicago-bred showmanship on the standard "Bring It on Home."

The same scene can also be found at Harpers Ferry in Allston, Ed Burke's in Mission Hill, the Linwood Grille in the Fenway or Sticky Mike's downtown. Blues musicians are bringing it home all over. The music is heard in weekly jams at places like Wally's in the South End, the Boston Beach Club at Faneuil Hall, the Tam in Brookline, the Middle East Cafe in Central Square, Club III in Somerville and the Black Rose in Harvard Square. Even in the suburbs, Quincy's Yard Rock and Maynard's Sittin' Bull Pub are signposts to the music's expansion.

"Boston is a sophisticated town that can appreciate heritage, and not just what comes on the radio," says harmonica-player Tim Gartland of the band Walk That Walk, which took the Johnny D's stage before the Rick Russell Band, "and that comes into play.

"Baby boomers are getting older and want to listen to something closer to the rock they listened to in the '60s and early '70s," Gartland says. "The blues are a natural music to listen to. They don't want to listen to rap or punk. They just want music they can drink beer to, and dance to, and get loose. It's an American folk music."

"I've been to L.A., the Midwest, the South—and Boston has more blues talent than any other area that's happening right now."
Blue Monday bandleader GEORGE LEWIS

"When it's honest and real," Rick Russell says, "People feel it."

"Boston's a real boom town right now," says Richard "Rosie" Rosenblatt, who plays harmonica for the 11th Hour Rhythm Kings and is president of Newton's Tone-Cool Records, a locally oriented blues label whose next release features Boston's own country/blues treasure, Paul Rishell.

CHICAGO SHOWMAN: Luther "Guitar Jr." Johnson lets loose at the House of Blues. His Windy City-style of playing has found a home in Boston, a city that welcomes every strain of blues.

BLUES COUP: Michelle Willson, leader of Evil Gal, surprised many by taking her Boston-based, eight-piece R&B/blues band to Memphis and beating out 16 other groups to win the Amateur Blues Talent Competition.

Of his 1991 CD, Boston Blues Blast Vol. 1, featuring 18 area artists, Rosenblatt adds, "Disc jockeys around the country have told me it's one of the best compilations they've heard, especially from unknown people."

It has taken time, but the city's blues musicians, clubs and reputation are becoming more well known.

"The scene's just waiting for someone to write about it nationally," guitarist Russell says between sets at Johnny D's, a club that eamed last year's W.C. Handy Keeping Blues Alive Award, an honor previously given to such blues hotspots as Antone's in Austin, Texas, and Tipitina's in New Orleans.

"I really think we're on a plane with the likes of Austin," Russell says. "We don't have a Stevie Ray Vaughan, but Austin didn't have one until somebody started checking him out. There are a lot of great players here."

"Boston has to be among the top-five cities—that's for sure," says club-owner Ed Burke, who has traveled to other blues capitals to scout talent. "It's right behind Chicago and New Orleans."

Harpers Ferry co-owner Charlie Abel agrees, "I've been to other cities and I've listened to other acts, and they can't touch Boston."

That reality came true this past month when Evil Gal—an eight-piece,

R&B/blues band that won Harpers 1993 Battle of the Blues Bands— went on to the annual Amateur Blues Talent Competition down in Memphis, and beat out 16 other groups from across the country.

"That probably opened a few eyes," pipes Russell, who happened to be in Memphis, and contends that Evil Gal's jump-blues attack was "the most professional," in a "scene littered by Stevie Ray wannabes."

"They blew the lid off the place," agrees bassist George Lewis, who leads the Blue Monday house band at House of Blues and was also in Memphis during the competition.

"Boston, believe it or not, and New England are second only to Chicago in the depth of talent in the blues genre."
House of Blues spokesman NIGEL SHANLEY

"I am in complete shock," says Evil Gal leader Michelle Willson, a brassy singer who first put together the band for a one-shot tribute show to such classic vocalists as Dinah Washington and Ruth Brown. "The thing just sort of took off.

"It's a big feather in the cap for Boston that a band actually went through the trouble of going down there, and won," says Willson, whose band's trip to Memphis was supported by the Boston Blues Society. "Within the last couple of years, the blues community and musicians have pulled together and supported one another."

For winning, Willson's group earned a $1,000-cash prize, and the opportunity to perform at a number of Southern festivals, as well as the W.C. Handy Awards show in October, a trip for which the band will raise funds with an Oct. 5 House of Blues show. Evil Gal guitarist Joe Craig Jones was also awarded the first annual Albert King Award, for being the most promising guitarist among the participants.

House of Blues bandleader Lewis says, "I've played the whole country. I've been to L.A., the Midwest, the South— and Boston has more blues talent than any other area that's happening right now."

His Memphis friend "Shelly," who came back up to Boston with Lewis, agreed, "As far as musicianship goes, Boston blows Memphis away. But, in terms of the crowd, there's too much soul in Memphis."

Sitting at House of Blues' upstairs bar, after Lewis's shifting all-star band had finished for the night, Shelly says, "If this band had played in Memphis, people would have been freaking out. [These people] were holding their beers tight, and it was as if they were wanting to let go, but they didn't."

House of Blues—opened by Hard Rock Cafe founder Isaac Tigrett, last November to huge hoopla, due in part to investors such as actor/"Blues Brother" Dan Aykroyd—has prompted some cynical reactions from the local scene. Some people point to the club's clientele of tourists, students and suburbanites who never followed the blues. Others say House of Blues' decor of authentic Southern folk art and ceiling reliefs of blues heroes make the place look like an antiseptic version of a New Orleans juke joint.

But on the record, people on the blues scene mostly give House of Blues a lot of credit.

"The House of Blues has been a positive impact, if just for the mere fact that they've introduced new people to the blues, and subsequently strengthened the blues scene," says Harpers Ferry's Abel.

Keyboardist Bruce Bearse, who leads the Toni Lynn Washington Band, adds, "Having the House of Blues open up, and having someone big in the media like Dan Aykroyd pushing it, makes the blues more viable for everybody."

"What we try to do here is educate people as to the impact of the blues and its influence on modern music," House of Blues spokesman Nigel Shanley says, noting tours are even given to school children. "It's very important that this culture be celebrated."

As for why House of Blues is celebrating the music here, having opened its Harvard Square club before others around the country, Shanley affirms, "Boston, believe it or not, and New England are second only to Chicago in the depth of talent in the blues genre."

There will always be other blues fans who prefer the roadhouse atmosphere of Harpers Ferry or neighborhood-bar feel of Ed Burke's, the Linwood Grille and the Midway Cafe in Jamaica Plain. But is there enough depth in blues talent—or an audience to go with it—around town?

"There are so many places doing blues now," says Ed Burke, who has begun booking alternative folk-rock some nights. "The [blues] market has been watered down a bit."

"A lot of it is overkill," opines guitarist Frank O'Brien, a former doorman at the now-defunct Nightstage who has been booking blues at the Linwood Grille. "Since the House of Blues has been around, no matter what night it is, it seems to be packed. A lot of people go there, like they're expecting Dan Aykroyd to serve them a drink. Overall, the club scene is hurting a little bit."

Even House of Blues, an automatic door line since it opened, is not immune to some slack in attendance. On a recent Thursday night, even Boston blues guitar-virtuoso Ronnie Earl and his Broadcasters delivered a feisty, soulful, late set to half-a-house.

Flo Murdock, talent booker for Johnny D's, observes of the scene, "Like anything, you can only spread it so thin."

Not that the clubs aren't trying.

Mai Cramer, a blues authority for 15 years at WGBH-FM, where she airs Blues After Hours on weekend nights, says she used to mail a calendar of upcoming events. Now, she says, "It's too long to read all at once over the air, which is an indication of how big the scene has become."

"Everybody's interested in opening a blues club," keyboardist Bearse says. "They can make money."

"I really think we're on a plane with the likes of Austin. We don't have a Stevie Ray Vaughan, but Austin didn't have one until somebody started checking him out."
Blues guitarist
RICK RUSSELL

That's a source of concern for Mark Ryder, head of the Boston Blues Society, which seeks to increase awareness of the blues in the area.

"I love to see it become big, but I hate to see it exploited," Ryder says of the blues. "I fear for its becoming generic."

"I worry about the art form's being properly recognized," concurs Ronnie Earl. "There are a lot of bands that play blues, but not very many that I think are real... It's about soul, not flash and clothes."

"I do think we need a lot more integration, but I see it coming," offers disc jockey Holly Harris, who helps bring blues to a commercial radio audience on WBOS-FM Sunday nights (WBCN and WCGY also air shows). Harris suggests that a blues festival in Franklin Park might be one method of broadening the music's exposure.

An integration of musical styles is not lacking in Boston, however.

"When you go to Austin, you realize there's an Austin sound, and New Orleans has a New Orleans sound," Tone-Cool's Rosenblatt says. "Boston has attracted people from so many places, and mixed styles from so many places. It's a place where blues players are not stuck in one style."

"There aren't just Stevie Ray Vaughan clones," keyboardist Bearse agrees. "There are jump blues, and Chicago, Memphis and New Orleans styles. It's getting more diversified, and the scene keeps growing because of that."

Among the notable players who relocated to Boston with authentic regional styles intact are Southern soul/blues veteran Mighty Sam McClain, Texas singer Darrell Nulisch, and Chicago migrants George "Earring" Mayweather and Luther "Guitar Jr." Johnson, who formerly played with the late Muddy Waters.

"I couldn't have come to a better

Cumming's creative pranks delight and challenge in MFA retrospective

Skulls 'R Us ? See what an unfettered imagination can do in Robert Cumming: Cone of Vision, a major midcareer retrospective that allows us inside the quirky ultracontemporary world of this hometown artist. Cumming graduated from the Massachusetts College of Art before going on to achieve international recognition for his humorous transformations of ordinary objects.

Take Cumming's interest in soap. His visual-prank-of-a photograph Ivory Dial Switch depicts two bars of Ivory soap, but a mirror reveals that Cumming has lovingly carved "Dial" on their backs. Bathroom Faucets I've Lived With for 5 Years presents us with a historical vista and an autobiographical record—of plumbing fixtures. The sharp, oversized and animated pair of scissors, the star subject of Pinking

CUTTING EDGE: Boston-artist Robert Cumming's Pinking Shears, enamel on wood, 1993.

Shears, brings home Cumming's approach of placing unnatural focus on an unusual selection of objects.

Seventy-five pieces, ranging from black-and-white photographs to a 5-foot wooden sculpture and a 17-foot balloon, show this visual punster at his best.

The Museum of Fine Arts rarely receives credit for its commitment to the art of the present. For several decades, the Department of Prints, Drawings and Photographs has zealously pursued a collections policy—buttressed by a considerable budget—focusing on contemporary artists. Ann Havinga and Cliff Ackley of the MFA's PDP deserve credit for showcasing this intriguing local artist and for writing wall text that is mercifully free of theoretical twittering.

Cumming's first pieces actually appeared in the local Boston press. Many years ago, the Boston Sunday Herald staged weekly contests, offering a dollar for the best takeoff on a provided curlicue drawing. Cumming's entry won repeatedly, an event that not only gave him artistic confidence but also provided a welcome supplement to his allowance. His talent for taking a "thing" (most often an object familiar to us from pop culture), removing it from its accustomed setting and tweaking our assumptions makes viewing his work a funny/puzzling/unsettling experience.

As part of his puzzle cum joke, Cumming will often take a motif, free-associate and express the results in different media. Originally derived from the death's-head image on early-American gravestones, a skull becomes a guitar pick, an artist's palette, a light bulb, a balloon and an attenuated stick. The sassiest of these is the palette, which is suspended above rocks littered with paint brushes. Cumming's comment? He's poking fun at the hallowed, but stodgy, genre of landscape painting. We may have struggled with penmanship, but the alphabet leaps from the copy-book page when Cumming gets a hold of it. The acrylic-wash drawing Plain Painted Parts shows individual letters lounging about an otherworldly landscape (or, as I prefer to think, having a picnic on Mars).

Not surprisingly, Cumming refuses to confine either himself or his imaginative creations to one medium, and he makes paintings, large acrylics, paper works, sculpture, drawings, prints and photographs. Central to this multimedia approach is the concept of craftsmanship. The 5-foot fountain pen came from a $2-million machine shop and the chairs, charmingly unusable as they are, would shine as examples of the furnituremaker's art alone.

At the MFA through November 28, the exhibition was organized by the Museum of Contemporary Art, San Diego, in collaboration with the Contemporary Arts Museum, Houston. This project was made possible by a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts, a federal agency, and a generous contribution from Dr. and Mrs. Charles C. Edwards. ❑ place," Johnson says with a quiet smile, backstage at House of Blues. "My career has been going up ever since I've been here."

"There are a lot of clubs within a four- to five-hour radius," says Nulisch, "so you can work a lot."

"It's a rich geographical area," says Joe Hajjar, owner of Quincy's Yard Rock. "If you include Boston, Providence, Worcester and Portsmouth (the southern-New Hampshire city that holds its own blues festival), I don't know of any part of the country that's richer."

"This city hasn't jumped on this blues wave like a lot of cities," Nulisch adds, noting the legacy of Rhode Island's Roomful of Blues, which helped launch Earl and Duke Robillard, as well as clubs like Jonathan Swifts, which occupied Harvard Square before House of Blues.

Gordon Beadle, a saxophonist who is seen around town with everyone from Johnson to Evil Gal (and at many a blues jam, as well), agrees. "The last couple of years, there's kind of been a momentum," he says, "but it kinda goes back to Roomful of Blues. It's kind of cumulative."

There's even a new generation catching on to the blues. Witness "Monster" Mike Welch, a 13-year-old guitarist who first honed his chops at Sunday-afternoon jams at Johnny D's and even got his bum immortalized in cement at the House of Blues inauguration.

"To see someone of that age who prefers to be playing the blues than rock 'n' roll is very encouraging," says Johnny D's Murdoch.

"People say it's a resurgence," Ed Burke says of the blues, "but it never really left. It's always been the root of rock 'n' roll. As that familiar quote goes, `The blues had a baby and they named it rock 'n' roll.'

"People want to be entertained," Burke says, "and these blues people put on a good show." ❑

Convertibles, Camels and Coca-Cola: Calendar Girl tries for nostalgia but results in nausea. Three '60s teen-agers set out on a juvenile search for Marilyn Monroe but end up discovering the really important things in life, like tattoos. The film is a rerun of Happy Days, only the jokes and cardigans are replaced by cuss words and nudity, and Jason Priestly plays a very uncool Fonz. The intermittent scenes of deep emotion and bonding between these three are abrupt and awkward, and better suited for a New England Telephone or a Pepto Bismol commercial.

DAZED AND CONFUSED

Perhaps this year's funniest bit of nostalgia, this ode to the '70s is an irrefutable argument that the decade is the nadir of fashion. Richard Linklater, director of the microbudget cult-hit Slacker, takes his Generation X sensibility and relocates it to 1976, probing the endless search for beer, bongs and sex among the new seniors and incoming freshmen of a mid-American high school. It may not be as good as the two films it most closely resembles, American Graffiti and Fast Times at Ridgemont High, but it bridges the generation gap between them nicely. A must for '70s-hard-rock aficionados.

J.W. Hall

The Fugitive is quintessential Harrison Ford. No one cracks nervous jokes under fire quite the way Ford does, and since the part of Doctor Kimble, the film's protagonist, calls for a lot of that, it fits Ford like a glove. As the falsely convicted killer of his beloved wife, he wins our sympathy. As the escapee pursuing his wife's killer, he wins our admiration. And as a daredevil fugitive who risks life and limb to evade hardheaded but good-humored lawman played by Tommy Lee Jones, he wins our attention. Our attention drifts, though, as the spectacular action/chase scenes are replaced by dry details of Kimble's investigation. We are too prepared for the ending, which winds down in trite anticlimactic fight scenes.

Wolfgang Peterson directs this exciting, coherent, and often humorous action thriller starring Clint Eastwood as Secret Service Agent Frank Horrigan, a "borderline burnout with questionable social skills" who still feels guilty that he didn't protect JFK that day in Dallas. Frank gets a second chance, compliments of rogue-CIA-operative and would-be-presidential-assassin Mitch Leary (John Malkovich) who engages Frank in a game of cat-and-mouse. Renee Russo is good as career-Secret Service agent Lilly Raines and Frank's love interest. Almost over-the-hill, Frank is less believable as Lily's love interest even if he does adore jazz, play the piano and grin disarmingly after making chauvinist remarks.

Forget character development. Forget plot. Even the scary parts—and there are many—don't go over the top. The dinosaurs rule Jurassic Park, and taining humans are Dennis (Wayne Knight), a treacherous, whiny computer genius responsible for the dinosaurs running amuck in Jurassic Park and a greedy, cowardly lawyer (Martin Ferraro) who deserves to be turned into dinosaur food. If you wish lawyers were an extinct species, you'll enjoy director Steven Spielberg's visual lawyer joke. The talents of Laura Dern, Sam Neill and Jeff Goldblum as scientists are utterly wasted.

Director Philip Kaufman's elegant and confounding film based on Michael Crichton's novel is a Japanese mystery tour set in L.A. that begins when a prostitute is found dead on the Nakamoto Corporation's board-room table. The two LAPD Special Services liaison officers assigned to the case (Sean Connery and Wesley Snipes) complement each other. Connery is wise; Snipes is an everyman who has much to learn—about the Japanese and about himself. Kaufman flashes ideas at us like lightning but doesn't always develop them. His exploration of corporate culture is disturbing: big business is, above all, a man's world. Girls, there's room for you at the top, too, provided you're a gorgeous prostitute.

A genuinely heartwarming tear-jerker that doesn't wholly sacrifice complexity and intelligence when it's yanking your strings. Josh Waitzkin (Max Pomeranc) is a 7-year-old whiz at chess, described in the loaded chess phrase as a "young Bobby Fischer." The film captures the excitement and dangers of having such gifts and makes no demands that viewers necessarily understand or care about chess. The most prominent theme is the battle between the father (the excellent Joe Mantegna) and Josh's two wildly different chess teachers, played by Ben Kingsley and Larry Fishburne, over Josh's upbringing and his inhibiting decency. Pomeranc is terrific, avoiding smarmy precociousness—and you can't help but love those big eyes.

TRUE ROMANCE

There's a moment that best captures True Romance's spirit: Patricia Arquette picks up the top of the toilet tank and slams it over her attacker's head. In a just world, someone would do the same to the makers of this movie. In Detroit, Christian Slater and Patricia Arquette meet grungy-cute, fall in love and marry, then head for L.A. with a suitcase full of cocaine stolen from the Mob. The movie offers a fast-forward romance; mucho macho posturing and gut-wrenching violence that screenwriter Quentin Tarantino takes to its Reservoir Dogs-like logical, absurd conclusion: puke, my-name-is-Dick and toilet jokes galore; endless pop culture references; and dialogue that often sounds like bad Mamet. True Romance is all smart-ass attitude; it thinks it is sooo cool.

THE WEDDING BANQUET

Another charming—and moving—comedy from Ang Lee about generational conflicts in a Chinese-American family. Here a gay son, who is still in the closet and beset by the matchmaking efforts of his parents, decides to marry one of his tenants, a spirited Chinese painter (May Chin) who needs a green card. With his lover pretending to be his roommate, the situation gradually gets out of hand as a raucous wedding banquet becomes unavoidable and his visiting parents linger in his house. What makes Lee's films special are not only his wonderfully light touch and skillful pacing, but the sadness that suddenly wells in the hearts of his characters. Standing out are the striking, likable Chin and Sihung Lung, marvelous as the father everyone is trying to protect from the truth.

HEART AND HEAT

"...a visual, domestic feast of color, flowers, fabrics and paintings... Scorsese brings to the table his masculine, Catholic, obsessive and insistent genius."

The Age of Innocence opens magnificently. A close-up of a single flower against a red background, hidden behind a thin veil of lace unfolds in time-lapse fashion. The music swells. The image is repeated again and again. The sequence is refined, formal and elegant, but oh so passionate, erotic and insistent. And this is just the title sequence!

IMPROPER AFFAIR: Daniel Day-Lewis and Michelle Pfeiffer violate the code of 1870s New York society by falling in love.

With it, director Martin Scorsese captures the heart and heat of this story, based on Edith Wharton's Pulitzer Prize-winning novel, about a young man, Newland Archer (played by the brilliant Daniel Day-Lewis), whose desire to live a life of feeling, imagination and intelligence conflicts with the life that's expected of him as a member-in-good-standing of upper-class, "old" New York society in the 1870s. Newland is engaged to the beautiful and conventional May Welland (wonderfully played by Winona Ryder) but falls in love with May's exotic, older cousin, the Countess Ellen Olenska (the equally wonderful Michelle Pfeiffer), an expatriate New Yorker, who's come home from Europe to escape a disastrous marriage.

Edith Wharton, who was herself a member of New York society, wrote The Age of Innocence in 1920, seven years after she divorced her husband and moved to Europe at the age of 49. In the novel she looks back to an early period and at what could have been her own story. The opening scene signals screenwriters Jay Cocks and Martin Scorsese's intent to be faithful to the novel. The part of the omniscient narrator is handled by voice-over (Joanne Woodward). Even more remarkable is Scorsese's exhilarating cinematic bravado, energy and artistry. He brilliantly establishes Wharton's key images, themes, characters and relationships. The scene takes place at the opera, which suggests that society, not the individual, comes first, and that any drama between two people is played out on stage, in society.

Newland and Ellen learn that genteel society will go to great lengths to maintain the status quo while preserving a calm, unruffled appearance. Society is a "tribe" whose rules are very strict, even if it's "a hieroglyphic world" in which the rules remain unspoken. When, at the end, Ellen leaves a dinner party on the arms of an elderly and dignified couple who represents the pinnacle of New York society, the moment is the New York-society equivalent of Joe Pesci "whacking" somebody in Goodfellas. In fact, Scorsese picked Michelle Pfeiffer to play the part of the Countess Olenska after seeing her play a mobster's wife in Married to the Mob.

But the story does take place in a kinder, gentler, if not totally innocent age, before Goodfellas and before Bonfire of the Vanities, when being born into society, not making money, was important and when both God and the Devil could be found in the details. Certainly Wharton doesn't spare the details of society's accouterments: the subtleties of dress, the proper place settings, the appropriate length of time between the engagement and the marriage, the number of courses at a meal, the acceptable means of transportation—and neither does Scorsese. The production company included an etiquette consultant, and a food-history-and-presentation expert who oversaw the film's seven dinners.

The movie is a visual, domestic feast of color, flowers, fabrics and paintings.

Is the novel as sensual as the movie? Some of the most erotic scenes, such as the one in which Archer undoes the buttons of Countess Olenska's glove and kisses her hand, can be found in the novel. The pages do give off heat. But Scorsese brings to the table his masculine, Catholic, obsessive and insistent genius. You feel his heat permeating this timeless Protestant period piece. ❑

STAR-GAZING IN TORONTO

"...every foreign and independent film that will play in Boston is unveiled there, royally, along with—live!—the nervous distributor, the intense director, the haughty actors and a grandiose restaurant party."

For 13 lucky years, I've crossed into Canada each September for long film-going days and nights at the Toronto Festival of festivals. In that time, the fest has swelled from a gawky, sweetly earnest enterprise into, with Cannes and Berlin, one of the three most powerhouse film festivals in the world.

The North American art-house calendar year kicks in at Toronto; practically every foreign and independent film that will play in Boston this fall and winter is unveiled there, royally, along with—live!—the nervous distributor, the intense director, the haughty actors and a grandiose restaurant party. This year, Toronto got the world premiere of Gus Van Sant's Even Cowgirls Get the Blues (everyone loathed it) and the North American premiere of Jane Campion's Piano (everyone adored it) among dozens of ultra-hot new pictures, including first-time director movies from African-American actors Morgan Freeman (Bopha!) and Forrest Whitaker (Strapped).

There's also good stuff at Toronto for quieter, more contemplative moviegoers. The 50-or-so Big Pictures are surrounded by 250 smaller, more esoteric ones. Unlike the Boston Film Festival, where the unknown pictures are booked haphazardly and mysteriously (they are usually pretty bad), the fine Toronto selections are made by expert programmers, who have traversed the globe uncovering them.

I could tell you of these little gems, such as Ning Ying's For Fun, about a bunch of old Chinese men who start an amateur-hour version of the Peking Opera, or Patricia Gruben's Ley Lines, in which a Canadian director from Vancouver traces her patriarchal lineage to Texas, to Hitler's Germany, to the Inuits of the North Pole.

Instead, I'll gossip about Me and Bobby McGee versus Blue Velvet.

Kris Kristofferson, whom I barely sighted in a barbecue line at a lawn party, looks these days like every other faded '60s rocker, with a white beard, a soft nose, jeans and boots. But Dennis Hopper, after his drug-crazy years, still has his chutzpah. Cinema's Mr. Danger was hanging out at a party with a dyed-blond, stringy-haired, high-heeled, tight-and-tiny-skirted babe. On each arm.

The bigger they are, the more they remember the Little People? Since 1981, I've carried around a splendid memory of hours and hours rapping away once with Edward James Olmos, prior to Miami Vice, Stand and Deliver, etc. Well, Eddie has thought of other things. "Your face is familiar," Olmos said, not very persuasively, when I introduced myself. Then he lapsed into smile-button, California-speak: "It's really nice to see you again, Gerry," he said, robot-voiced.

But the Toronto fest is brimming with so many celebs that, sooner or later, you'll find the one for you. I settled in at a party with actress Kerry Fox, the brilliant New Zealander who starred, as the shy-author Janet, in Jane Campion's Angel at my Table, and as the trouble-causing younger sister in Gillian Armstrong's The Last Days of Chez Nous. She's very friendly and at the stage of her career where she's nicely surprised if someone recognizes her and knows her films.

Holly Hunter (Raising Arizona, Broadcast News) is at another stage—a deserved star. I admit I gawked, seeing the diminutive Holly across a party in genuinely old, genuinely faded jeans. She looks like a lit.-major graduate student, but oh those incredible, mascara'd eyes!

Hunter won Best Actress at the Cannes Film Festival for Piano, with her formidable, Brontëesque portrayal of a tempestuous 19th-century lass who is sent across the high seas in a forced marriage. Hunter could be the 1994 Academy Award-winner for the same, and Campion's Piano is the one art-house movie at Toronto that appears to be a certain hit when it opens in the United States later this fall. It's terrific.

My other favorites from Toronto?

Ken Loach's Raining Stones, a warm, delightful political comedy about the schemes of an unemployed Manchester worker to raise money for his daughter's First Communion dress.

Todd Hayne's Dottie Gets a Spanking, a wonderfully imaginative Freudian short set in a mythical 1950s about a pre-gay, 5-year-old boy's adoration for Dottie, a Lucy-like TV comedy star.

Christine Richey's In the Gutter and Other Fine Places, a heart-wrenching documentary set in subterranean Alberta, Canada, in which the filmmaker spent three years following three marginal men—two alcoholic, one schizophrenic—picking their way through garbage bins in search of returnable bottles.

Victor Nunez's Ruby in Paradise, a quietly poetic story of an ordinary girl from Tennessee who wanders to the Florida coast to work in a souvenir shop, featuring a stirring performance by Winona's kid sister, Ashley Judd.

With luck, some of the above should get to Boston. ❑

THUMBS DOWN: Toronto Film Fest critics said no to Even Cowgirls Get the Blues, starring Uma Thurman.

ART IS A COMMODE-ITY: Boston artist BoHill Wong's whimsical work has won over serious collectors and a New York gallery.

Artist BoHill Wong

BY JULIE FLAHERTY

Bathroom artist flush with success

BoHill Wong, artist, is now in his bathroom period, which might be the biggest news in the art world since Picasso got the blues. Whimsical commodes and other water-closet paraphernalia are becoming a theme for the Boston artist. They are a change from the anthropomorphic fruits and vegetables and partying snakes he has done in the past, so gallery owners have their ears to the ground, because despite being mentally disabled, BoHill has made it to the big time.

Originally from Hong Kong, BoHill has come to prominence through the help of the Gateway Crafts Program, a sort of collective artists' studio in Brookline funded by the Department of Mental Retardation. There, BoHill and 31 other artists with disabilities from autism to cerebral palsy weave, sculpt, write and draw under the supervision of professional artists.

For them, art is more than therapy: it is a profession. Ironically, "being a poor, starving artist is a respected job in society," says the program's exuberant director, Rae Edelson. But they are not altogether starving: Sixty percent of the profits go to the "clients," as the participants are sometimes called.

The addition of toilets to BoHill's repertoire doesn't mean he has given up the other ironic and often literal subjects that attracted the attention of the Cavin-Morris Gallery in New York. Some works, such as his snake in a bubble bath, have a dreamlike incongruousness and are almost psychoanalytical, which may be why several shrinks own original BoHills, as, by the way, does singer David Byrne.

"I remember SoHo," BoHill says fondly, recalling one of his openings—which he always attends—where he charmed everyone with his wide smile. Although he is bilingual, he speaks very little, but he is pithy and cheerful.

"I think I would like to try a snake sandwich," he says, when asked about the serpents he puts in his work.

BoHill, now 60, is ready to become a dirty old man, but a ridiculously charming one. He has a weakness for women, and sketches of sexy females—not just girls, but snakes and dolled-up "tomatoes"—are his favorites. He now has his own bachelor pad, after living in a nursing home for several years, and he is quick to offer to cook you dinner. Although he doesn't decorate with his own drawings ("There are too many to put up," he says), he is not shy about praising his own work, and often includes himself in his pictures.

He can't tell you where he gets his ideas, except maybe to point to his head. Luckily, "I have many, many ideas," he says.

Writer Stephen Davis

BY MEGAN GILMARTIN

A Jajouka Rolling Stone

Stephen Davis is cool. He's the type of man who stirs admiration and envy in the souls of those who experience him. Like a true '60s hippie, he listens to the inner voice of life and lives it without question. Through his career as Rolling Stone music editor, to rock 'n' roll biographer, to present-day "fictive ethnographist," Davis has dug his roots with dignity. His journeys have led him through kif-inspired conversations with music masters in Morocco to trashed motel rooms with rock-icons Jimmy Page and Robert Plant. Davis has hung out with everybody from Keith Richards to reggae-god Bob Marley. It is no wonder, then, that an afternoon spent with Davis involves conversation peppered with topics ranging from "botanical cleansing" to "ethnopsychiatry" to his everyday search for "deniability."

Jajouka Rolling Stone is the title of his latest book and first novel. After 20 years of research and seven trips to the North African mountains, Davis was finally ready to tell his mythological tale of pied pipers and pilgrims. "I knew I would write about Jajouka someday," he says recalling his first journey there. "I kept wondering what it would be like to go someplace and then keep coming back and get deeper into it and try to make the people come to life." Like every fable, Jajouka has the key components: enchanting music, innocence, exploitation and truth. It also, as Davis explains, has a moral. "It really is about the danger of the world turning into a theme park," he says, "Disney Earth!"

After a life of adventure, you would think that Davis is living large and lusty. In reality, this author's life in the Blue Hills is simple. But this maverick hasn't completely abandoned his rock 'n' roll roots. For example, Davis's mornings are slightly askew. "I get up and make my kids breakfast," he says in his casual drawl, "and then I read the paper and screw off until I can't screw off anymore and the level of guilt rises." As he readily admits, it's not his kids who need the cattle prod to get going in the morning; rather, it's Dad who needs the extra jab to get himself up and off to his private sanctuary, where he tries to pound out at least 1,000 words a day on his bottom-of-the-line Smith Corona word processor.

With 10 books under his belt, a happy family and a "Magic" horse, Davis has achieved personal and professional success. To what does he attribute his success? "Always overtipping the breakfast waitress," he says with a smile.

Iceland is surrounded by endless miles of seething ocean. It is pummeled by Arctic winds and perilous storms. Its latitude and longitude converge in as desolate a place as any on the planet. And while no one can say for certain what could have possessed the Vikings to come to this place we call Iceland over a hundred centuries ago, we do know what they found once they got here.

A valley. A mountain. And a spring surging up from a place deep beneath the surface of the earth. Forcing its way upward, through ice, solidified layers of lava, and rock. Until, finally, it burst through into the sunlight. A water of such improbable purity, there are those among us who, even now, fervently believe that it surely must have sprung up from the very gods themselves.

The Vikings braved 50-foot seas, gale winds and sea monsters to discover our water. Surely you can manage a trip to the corner market.

The same Icelandic spring of life that continues to flow as clean and clear now as it has since the Ice Age. Indced, from the very beginning of time itself. Thousands upon thousands of miles from anywhere. Untainted. Untouched. Unspoiled by civilization.

We call it Akva. A spring water unlike any other on earth. And if we seem a bit confidcnt in this, rcst assurcd it is not without good reason.

No other spring water, after all, comes from a placc so completely and utterly rcmovcd from the compromising influences of civilization. To put it mildly, Iceland is as far off the beaten path as any place on earth.

As a result, our Akva spring water is remarkably soft. Clear. Without so much as a trace of sodium or other impurities. We hope you will try Akva.

You will find that it's available now on the shelves of your favorite corner markct or dclicatesscn.

We know the Vikings had an almost insatiable thirst for .adventurc. Perhaps now wc know how they quenched it.

Akva spring water. The pure soul of Iceland.™

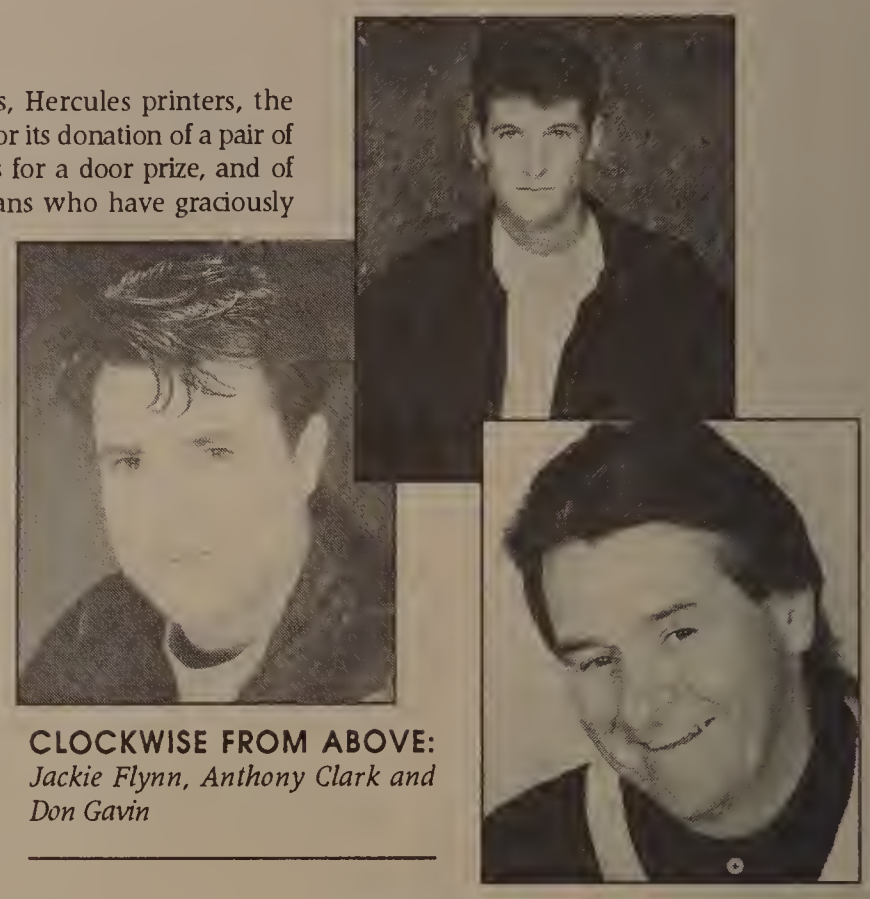
The Benefits of a Healthy Sense of Humor

"There is a thin line between laughter and pain; that is exactly what these comedians will be doing at Comics for Kids ..."

The word grass roots probably brings to mind visions of suburban green-carpeted lawns, which most of us in the big city can only dream of revisiting. It seems like the only grass roots we urbanites can touch are those that pop up meekly between the cracks in the sidewalk pavement.

For Jeanie Flynn, however, grass roots describes the close-knit feeling between local patrons and comedians who have pulled together to present the second annual Comics for Kids. Jeanie has coordinated this event to raise funds for children with cancer at New England Medical, the hospital that saved her life when she herself was diagnosed with cancer seven years ago.

"There is a thin line between laughter and pain; that is exactly what these comedians will be doing at Comics for Kids, telling a joke to help those in pain," explains Jeanie.



Comics for Kids will be held at the Comedy Connection on Wednesday Oct. 13 and will feature Boston comics Don Gavin and Jackie Flynn (Jeanie's brother), with a special guest appearance by Anthony Clark, one of the hottest names in Boston comedy and a favorite pick of clubs across the country.

Clark, known for his "viciously satirical mind," has just finished filming his third movie, Teresa's Tattoo, and recently appeared alongside Sting and Elton John in the Walden Woods concert. With the release of both his second film, This Thing Called Love, and the home video of his first movie, Dog Fight, Clark is still enthusiastic about performing for a worthy cause such as Jeanie's Comics for Kids.

Comics for Kids' star comedian Don Gavin, recently returned from a USO tour, has helped Jeanie promote this cause over the years. Co-starring comedian Jackie Flynn, whose sarcastic, observational humor has helped him acquire a string of headlining performances around the country and a recent shot at Star Search in Florida, explains why he performs at Jeanie's benefit every year. "We, as comedians, are fortunate to do what we do for a living. Its easy enough to put 'a little back' by doing these benefits. It creates a good feeling among friends."

Echoing her brother's feelings about "friends helping friends," Jeanie explains Comics for Kids is made entirely possible through the generosity of local friends and patrons, such as the Comedy Connection, Boston Beer Works, Hercules printers, the Texas Boot factory for its donation of a pair of lizard cowboy boots for a door prize, and of course, the comedians who have graciously donated their time and talents.

Celebrity guests are sure to attend, Jeanie promises, since her Celebrity Gala is only a month away. Comics for Kids is a prelude to the $40-plate Celebrity Gala on Nov. 19, at which comedians, anchorpersons and athletes from such teams as the Bruins will volunteer to act as dealers at a mock-casino night at Boston Beer Works.

Although the majority of the proceeds from Comics for Kids and Celebrity Gala will be donated to the hematology and oncology programs at New England Medical Center, funds will be allocated to start Jeanie's pet project, PACK (People Against Cancer in Kids). This program, explains Jeanie, will continue her efforts to "take children from the hospital whose [spirits] need a lift and bring them to a hockey game where they can meet with some of the Bruin players," such as Cam Neely and Ray Bourque, who informally volunteer their time.

"The effect this meeting has on the sick child's mental attitude," explains Jeanie, "and the subsequent medical progress is truly amazing." For advance tickets or information about Comics for Kids, call (617) 648-6238. ❑

Routine Excuses

Copping out more than working out? The following tips can help you run out of reasons to avoid sticking to your fitness program.

Some people just love to exercise. They bounce around in their day-Glo spandex, spewing fitness-related exclamations such as: "Running 16 miles makes me more energetic!" and "I just love sweating, and pulling all of the muscles in my back!"

As you can see, exercise can be extremely damaging to your brain (excuse 36B) due to the Natural High it gives you, which is only worsened by the ensuing Natural Munchies and the Natural Staring at Things for Excessive Amounts of Time. This euphoria-induced brain damage may (read: may not) explain why 50 percent of people drop out of their exercise program within six months, according to research cited in Men's Health.

Ninety-seven percent of the exercise partners who bet each other $40 that they wouldn't be the first to skip a workout, didn't miss a single one.

Not that this should discourage you from working out (excuse 11A), however, because although there's no way to cure the genetic glitch in my DNA that keeps me from working out regularly (excuse 63F), the cop-outs that most people give can, in fact, be overcome. Exercise physiologist and Boston YWCA fitness manager Ali Coffey is here to help. What follows are some clever comebacks to the most common exercise excuses:

1. It's raining/snowing/hailing small boulders so hard that the mailman isn't even going out today. Which is why they call him "Really Chubby Bob" down at the post office. If you don't want cruel nicknames given to you by columnists looking to increase their word count, Coffey recommends sticking to your workout by picking up for yourself some socks made of polypropylene, a material that wicks moisture away from your feet so that not only do you not get blisters, but (added bonus) your feet don't freeze and fall off (excuse 375D). A gortex (waterproof) jacket, as well as shoes capped with neoprene (the material used for wet suits) can also help the cause. For warmth and dryness on tighter budgets, try dusting the inside of your socks with talcum powder and covering the socks (with your feet in them) with plastic bags.

2. It's too hot. Bring a water bottle with you, if not a permanent-water IV, so your body can cool itself by sweating out the water. Also, provide yourself with some homemade cooling by predunking your exercise outfit in water and wringing it out; the dampness will lower your body temperature through evaporation. Finally, wear a headband, preferably loud day-Glo, to keep the sweat from stinging your eyes.

3. My schedule is far too busy. Well, excuuuse me. Because exercising should be as much of a priority in your life as: "5:30, Watch Hogan's Heroes," try scheduling workouts into your week as if they were important appointments. And if you have to miss one of these important appointments, due to some unforeseeable act of God causing headlines such as "All of New England Thrown a Great Distance," then just reschedule it and continue with your next workout. Contrary to what past research has been preaching, intermittent exercise is still very beneficial for your body, according to Coffey.

4. Exercising is too boring. If you're, say, an avid jogger who simply can't take another lap around and around (and around) the track, make an effort to work other activities into your schedule. Pursue neglected interests in singles tennis, cross-country skiing or full-court hoops. And even if you absolutely refuse to do any exercise except jogging (Stubborn, aren't we?), you can still enhance your jog through new challenges, such as juggling eight or nine flaming pins with your eyes closed or alternating your running-track location with a long, sloping, scenic route. Also, purchase a personal stereo and liven up your fitness program by listening to music, or even a few blood-pumping books gone audio: i.e., Silence of the Lambs, by Thomas Harris (Simon & Schuster Audioworks, and anything by Anne Rice, especially from her vampire collection (Random House Audioworks).

5. I'll never be able to stick to my exercise program, despite having read your first four insightful and highly informative tips. Buttering up won't make me overlook the comebacks to this last excuse. Go out and get yourself an exercise partner with an attitude; tandem nagging might be the extra impetus you need. Or put your money where your muscle should be. According to a Michigan State University study cited in American Health, 97 percent of the exercise partners who bet each other $40 that they wouldn't be the first to skip a workout, didn't miss a single one. (Compared to only 25 percent of those who didn't wager cash.)

But, of course, you left your $40 in your other pair of pants, which is probably getting lost at the cleaners as we speak (excuse 196B). In which case, you win. What time does Hogan's Heroes come on?

*Reader participation/writer-slacking!: Any waiters or waitresses out there willing to send me (The Improper Bostonian) your pet peeves about dining patrons, to be published in an upcoming Waitperson's Wishlist (i.e., I wish you wouldn't let your kid throw "the pretty colored" sugar packets all over my section)?* ❑

Filtering Out the Truth

"Lately, the practice of filtering impurities from red wines . . . has generated sharp controversy."

Stripped to its essentials, making wine is no different today than it has been for centuries. The process is neither mysterious nor complicated. What separates us from the ancients is that we understand the natural processes and we can control their progression to produce—more or less—the kind of wine we want.

The initial stage involves collecting the juice of ripened grapes in a fermentation container (barrel, vat or tank) and exposing it to a sizable population of yeast. These single-cell organisms obtain the energy to reproduce at a geometric pace by consuming the abundant sugar now in their midst; the most important by-product of this frenzied multiplication drama is ethyl alcohol. Soon after, the sweet juice completes its transformation into wine, bacteria generally will begin converting any unstable and harsh malic acid present into softer, mellower lactic acid. At some point before bottling, the hazy liquid needs to be made clear one way or another and also requires continuous security against attack by whatever hungry microorganisms remain.

Producers of the finest wines often strive to conserve the grape's natural fruit, balance the flavor elements and prevent spoilage by doing as little as they possibly can. This is not due to inherent laziness but to the widespread conviction that minimal handling exposes wines' quality to the least risk. Current theory is that the best wines "make themselves." Whereas the most aggressive procedures available guarantee absolute protection from spoilage, they are also thought to suppress flavor development. Whatever the vintner's philosophy, he or she must decide how each of the substances threatening the wine's appearance and taste will be neutralized or removed.

Lately, the practice of filtering impurities from high-quality red wines, once almost universally practiced, has generated sharp controversy. Does passing wine through a filter automatically eviscerate it or can the procedure actually help it express its potential? Some of the industry's most influential writers, spokespersons and importers have vehemently decried filters' effects, insisting that along with whatever harmless levels of yeast and bacteria removed, filters also subtract crucial flavor components. Stability is achieved, but at the expense of character.

Wine producers and merchants, ever alive to new marketing possibilities, have begun to tout "unfiltered wines" as an unmistakable statement of quality. The decision to filter or not becomes, according to this view, the ultimate litmus test of a winemaker's seriousness and commitment. Filtering is characterized as a cosmetic convenience designed only to please customers who fear sediment or to suit penurious, uncaring shippers seeking to avoid the extra expense of transporting wine under temperature control.

This is all oversimplified. This argument appears to give the consumer some valid measure to distinguish one wine from another, but it does not. Any vintner wishing to remain in business for a long time must decide on a strategy to produce biologically stable wines untainted by floating particles, clouds or metallic hazes. Conscientious methods of attaining clarity and stability do not so much prevent a wine from aging nor strip its vitality as they remove impurities so that the wine can live to reach maturity in health. Filtration is not only one among the many practices—and by no means the most radical or brutal—that can be used to achieve these goals. Fining, an often-recommended complementary procedure, entails adding foreign substances to the wine; frequent racking into new barrels exposes the wine to a potentially harmful uptake of oxygen, and , in any case, requires longer wood maturation.

Unskilled winemakers may use filters improperly so that they introduce off-flavors, but this is not the fault of the underlying practice. Quality-conscious vintners filter out substances that pose real dangers but contribute nothing useful. On the other hand, overly manipulated wine may remain unfiltered because it has nothing left to remove. Highly sulfited wines, for instance, require less filtration.

As always, the ultimate proof is in the way the wine tastes. There are great Burgundies and Bordeaux that routinely employ filtration as part of their aging regime. Filtered wines may take longer to recover from bottling, but there is no logical reason why removing bacterial, yeasts or oxidized pigments should attenuate flavor. It's a good story, but it doesn't hold up. ❑

APPETEASERS

Fall in love with N.E. wines; bug out for dinner.

The Fall Wine Festival of New England will be hosted by Mellea Vineyards in conjunction with Le Amis du Vin on Sunday, Oct. 10, 2-6 p.m. in Dudley, Mass. The harvest season will be at its height, the foliage bright and the holiday weekend will make it the perfect time to ride into the hills and sample the tastes of New England. The festival will feature tastings from more than 30 of the region's premier restaurants and wineries. A prefestival wine symposium and a competition for the best wines are scheduled, as well as a fine-wine auction to benefit the B.U. Culinary Arts Program. Members of the Massachusetts Fancy Food Council will also be there with offerings that prove being locally produced really does make a difference. Jazz music will complete the afternoon. Tickets for the event are $27 in advance or $30 on the day of the event. Call (508) 943-5166 for information and tickets.

MODEL DATE: Ristorante Primavera's Nelson Oliveira and friend during DIFFA's Gala Roxy.

TABLE TALK

Rumor has it Mr. Leung has cast a serious eye on Amsterdam's location in the Park Plaza building. Paul O'Connell, an Olive's alumnus, is opening up his own restaurant to be called Providence in November at 1223 Beacon St. in Brookline. Il Capriccio of Waltham has found a place in town, but we won't tell any tales so as not to jinx the deal. Bernardo's restaurant on Fleet Street in the North End has remodeled and created an open kitchen; diners can now indulge two senses, smelling and seeing. And last, the Colorado Public Library restaurant in Brookline will be moving to a new location.

In the menu department, David's restaurant on Stuart Street will be introducing a new fall menu next week, with dishes such as duck-and-crab-meat lasagna and rabbit fricassee. For his putanesca dish, Chef Ross Cameron has also lined up a supplier for truly fresh Wellfleet clams. Always interested in Louisiana's cuisine, the Fishery in Cambridge has introduced a new appetizer: grilled, smoked alligator sausage. But watch out, it may bite back!

FRUIT OF THE VINE

For the first time, Bread & Circus in Cambridge is offering a wine seminar and tasting. Scheduled on Tuesday evenings in October, between 6:30-8 p.m., the series starts with a taste of Spain on Oct. 5; continues with California's artisan wineries: reds and whites on Oct. 12 and 19; concluding with organic wines, led by Bread & Circus wine-manager Peter McCann, Oct. 26. The seminars will be held at the Cambridge Multicultural Arts Center on Second Street, with access available to the center's galleries. The fee is $5 per session; tickets are available at the customer-service desk in the Cambridge store. Bring ID if you don't look over the drinking age. Call the store at 492-0070 for information and brochure.

Across the river in Boston, the French Library on Marlborough Street is offering an introductory five-session course in French-wine appreciation, taught in English by Hugh McPhail. Beginning Oct. 18, the course will consist of five two-hour sessions held Mondays at 6:15 p.m. Topics include the wine-making process, evaluating wines, and tastings. Registration is $100 for members and $125 for non-members. For information, call 266-4351.

OCTOBERFEST

If you prefer beer to wine, mark the Harpoon Octoberfest on your calendar. On Oct. 1, 2 and 3, Harpoon Ale hosts its huge Octoberfest party at its brewery on Northern Avenue in Boston. There will be beer, beer, and more beer, oom-pa-pa bands and food, as well as contests and prizes. A free shuttle is available from South Station and the admission is $5 (there is a cash bar), under-21 free. All visitors over drinking age receive a mug. For more information call 455-1935.

BUG APPETIT

The latest culinary frontier seems to be insects! Remember chocolate-covered ants in the 1970s? According to the Food Insects Newsletter, in Washington D.C. (a city filled with all kinds of congressional insects), a place called the Insect Club incorporates bugs not only into the decor, but also into the menu. Along with the decorative 14-foot dragonfly, the club offers seven free buggy items in addition to its regular menu. Does a chimichanga stuffed with creamy pureed mealworm or a piece of cricket brittle titillate the taste buds? Who will be the first to board the bandwagon in Boston? ❑

Guest Dining Review / Robert B. Parker

PUDDING ON THE RITZ

"...I don't know how the food is prepared and seasoned, and call me crazy, I don't much care. The kitchen should keep on doing what it's doing."

In Cambridge, Joan and I like to eat at a restaurant called Upstairs at the Pudding on Holyoke Street, where Joan is, as far as I can determine, the mayor. Right up front, let me say that I'm biased. I have a special fondness for the Pudding because they treat me right. Unlike most restaurants, they know who I am (Joan Parker's husband), they accept me for who I am, and when I come for dinner, the hostess never tells me that the dumpster pickup is around back. Just because I live in Cambridge, and have a Ph.D. and write books doesn't mean I have to look like Chris Lydon. What's wrong with Wallace Beery?

The main dining room of the Pudding, which is up two flights of gracious stairs, has a ceiling that may be 30 feet high; I've always wanted to know, but never asked for fear of looking like a rube. Joan wouldn't be afraid to ask, but she doesn't care how high the ceiling is. The walls of the dining room are adorned with posters of Hasty Pudding Club productions dating back well into the 19th century. The posters are alleged to be more valuable than the building, though, myself, if I were offered either, I'd take the building. In good weather there is a patio. Actually, there's a patio regardless of the weather, but nobody wants to sit out there in the cold. It is a wooden deck, three stories above the street, ringed with flowers and plants, and canopied with small, sparkling white lights. Whenever I'm out there, I expect Peter Pan to swing through and make me young forever. Joan says childish forever doesn't count.

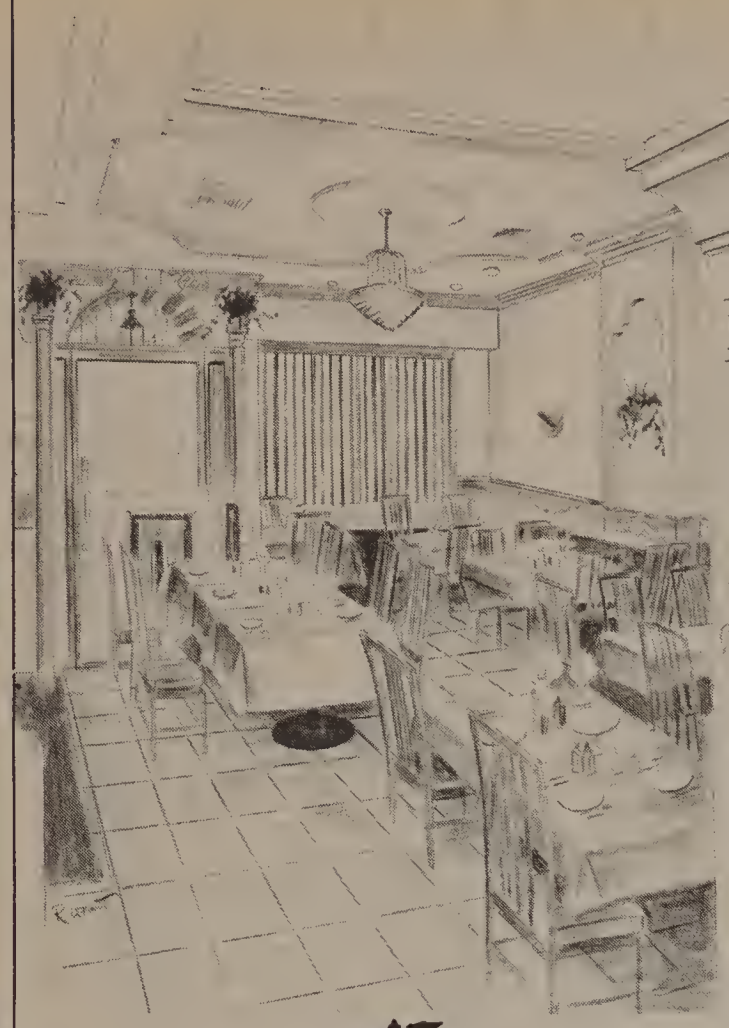
There is full liquor service (as I have often demonstrated), but no bar—the booze is arrayed on a long table at the edge of the room, supervised by a woman who makes a dandy Absolut martini on the rocks with a twist. But no matter how compelling the ambiance, any restaurant finally succeeds or fails on its food (remember Flynn's?). And the food at the Pudding is excellent. There are dandy little pizzas to share while you look at the menu. There are portobello mushrooms grilled with olive oil and lemon. There are beef steaks, and pastas, and chickens, and ducks, and tuna steaks, and lambs, and swordfish, and clams from Cape Cod, and vegetables from even closer. The wine list exceeds our need. And the desserts are good.

In fact, it's all good. If I were getting paid by the word, I would write in sumptuous detail about the food preparation, saucing and seasoning. But I'm not. So I won't. Besides I don't know how the food is prepared and seasoned, and call me crazy, I don't much care. The kitchen should keep on doing what it's doing.



But if you're in desperate need of a foodie fix, I'll mention some of the key words I would have used, had I written in sumptuous detail: delicate, unctuous, rich, fresh, crisp, compelling, hint, understated, roux, reduction, briny, insolent, innovative, essence, polished, delicious, delightful and delovely ... M.F.K. Fisher, eat your heart out.

COUTURE SHOCK

"To think that one can just zip into 29 without the proper regard for la mode is to exhibit an attitude that is ... insensitive to the delicate fashion sensibilities of others."

In the heady mid -'80s, 29 Newbury, affectionately known as just "29" by the cognoscente, enjoyed all the benefits and perqs associated with the gluttonous, overly materialistic surge that swept the nation, which was inexplicably due to the fact that we had an aging actor in the White House whose wife conversed on a first-name basis with the constellations. Why this was so, I am at a loss to explain, but the fact remains: The '80s were an ode to a forgotten streak of hedonism in America's collective unconscious, and 29 was everything the expense-account '80s aspired to be: glamorous, trendy, exclusive and patronized by the Beautiful People. Models and their worshipers and handlers swept into the intimate little bar, sipped Kir Royales on the patio, or disappeared into the unisex bathrooms to do who knows what. Aesthetically pleasing people arranged themselves becomingly on the bar stools or in the booths to admire the ever-changing art work and mutually congratulate themselves on being so hip.

IF YOU GO

29 NEWBURY

29 Newbury St. (Duh!)
Last call: 12:30 a.m.

Alas, I was but a youngster then, and could not partake to the fullest in the rituals that were so much a part of life at 29. Now that I'm finally old enough to have some real fun, we have become a soberer and duller nation, and 29 has lost a little of its glamorous sheen. However, it still retains a good deal of its former caché. The staff is still excruciatingly hip and sniffs disdainfully at clientele who are sporting less than up-to-the-moment couture. Woe to anyone who attempts to breach the door wearing white shoes or anything resembling last year's styles. To think that one can just zip into 29 without the proper regard for la mode is to exhibit an attitude that is shockingly cavalier and completely insensitive to the delicate fashion sensibilities of others.

Fortunately for us, the result of this wardrobe policing is that at no time will you ever, while you are on the premises of 29, have to be offended by the clothing habits of someone who does their shopping in the sale bin at J.C. Penney's. Even though the '80s are now just a couple of pages in the history books, the clientele at 29 is still extremely well groomed and highly decorative, although most of it is of the non-reproductive variety, which makes the chances of finding a date slim, to say the least. However, you will probably meet someone who will offer to do exciting things to your hair, or perhaps consult you on the new color scheme for your living room.

All this scrutiny of one's personal appearance might be daunting to some, but really, it's what makes 29 great. After an evening of dinner from the wonderful menu, surrounded by people who actually have table manners, and are aware of the fact that the proper way to enjoy the evening is by starting with a couple of martinis, then moving on to a couple of bottles of wine, followed by aperitifs, you begin to wonder what you were doing slugging shots in some meathead bar a couple of nights ago.

If you go to 29 often enough, and wear the right things, you will find that the staff loses quite a bit of its glacial facade, and actually starts to resemble what it is supposed to resemble, that is, staff, rather than fashion critics. The everybody-knows-everybody-else-here atmosphere does a good job of keeping out the riffraff, and all I can say is, you can't really go wrong in an establishment where everyone, including the bus boy, is attractive. ❑

"... Being a musician fulfills a need I knew was there, but never knew it was as deep as it was ..."

Social-studies major Joshua Redman graduated summa cum laude and Phi Beta Kappa from Harvard University in 1991. He was accepted to Yale Law School but took a year's deferment to hang out in the New York jazz scene and play tenor sax. In the fall of '91, he entered the Thelonious Monk International Jazz Saxophone Competition—and won.

Now guitarist Pat Metheny is calling Redman "the most important player to come along in 15 years."

"I respect Pat very much, but I think he might be a little misguided in that statement," demurs Redman, 24, who will lead a special quartet featuring Metheny, bassist Christian McBride and drummer Billy Higgins at the Charles Ballroom on Oct. 11.

"No matter how much I read what other people say—the critics, the public or the musicians—ultimately my self-evaluation dwarfs all of that," Redman says. "I'm incredibly self-critical.

"To me, it's not really important to be the best or the most important. What matters is fulfilling desires inside of me, my spiritual and intellectual needs. Being a musician fulfills a need I knew was there, but never knew it was as deep as it was."

Some might say that blood runs deep, since Redman's father is renowned tenor player Dewey Redman.

"I was into jazz at an early age because my mother liked jazz, and my father's records were around," says the younger Redman, who only saw his father on occasion, since his parents never married.

After experimenting with guitar and piano, Redman picked up the tenor at age 10. His father was an influence "in the same way that John Coltrane or Sonny Rollins or Dexter Gordon was an influence. I was very much drawn to the sound of the tenor sax in the jazz idiom."

Sidetracked into popular music during high school, Redman returned to jazz in college. He joined the Harvard Jazz Band and played at jam sessions during summer breaks. But his focus was on his studies.

"I had no time to play, but it was really in college that I kinda started to prefer jazz," the self-taught saxophonist says. "When I did listen to music, I hardly ever listened to anything but jazz."

Redman had long listened to Metheny, Higgins and bassist Charlie Haden, partly because they had played with his father. This year, Redman toured with Haden's Quartet West, and recorded his second Warner Bros. album, Wish, with all three musicians.

"There are a lot of people I always dreamed of playing with, but I'd say they were some of the people I dreamed of playing with more than anyone else," Redman says. "The record is a wish come true, and that's why it's called Wish.

"Initially there's a lot of apprehension and nervousness, and sometimes a lot of self-doubt," he says of playing with his idols. "But the experience of playing with the masters I've played with—and especially with Charlie and Billy and Pat—is once the music starts, immediately those kinds of concerns are gone. All the ego boundaries disappear. Because the way those three musicians choose to make their music, they're incredibly generous. You never feel their individuality tugging against yours, or somehow competing against you."

Wish ranges from ice-breaker "Turnaround," an Ornette Coleman tune familiar to all (and nailed on a first take), to a Redman-Metheny duet of the Eric Clapton hit "Tears in Heaven," to a pair of live tracks recorded at New York's Village Vanguard on a break from the studio.

On Oct. 11, Redman will be passing through his old Harvard Square stomping grounds, but social studies and law will be the last things on his mind. "Right now I live in the moment," he says. "You can never do everything you want to do. Maybe I will go back to school at some point, but right now, I'm blessed with the opportunities that I have."

STRINGS AND VISIONS AT THE BSO

"Seiji Ozawa knows his strengths—Romantic and Post-Romantic works—and this fall he'll exploit that repertoire, dwelling particularly on the considerable achievements of Hector Berlioz."

Mass. Ave. is about to become crowded with couples doddering to their cars, drunken with 19th-century dreams. The Boston Symphony Orchestra's season has almost begun. Seiji Ozawa knows his strengths—Romantic and Post-Romantic works—and this fall he'll exploit that repertoire, dwelling particularly on the considerable achievements of Hector Berlioz.

Several concerts will feature Berlioz's Symphonie Fantastique, an orchestral description of a disastrous opium trip. The 24-year-old Berlioz was eager to impress a rather chilly Irish actress whom he'd long been obsessed with. He wrote her this symphony as a sort of deranged serenade. In it, a "young musician of highly strung temperament and fiery imagination," tormented by unrequited love, takes an overdose of opium in the hopes of killing himself. The dose is insufficient; haunted by depression, he plunges into a series of ghastly hallucinations. He catches fleeting glimpses of his love and struggles to get close to her through the haze of opium, through a ballroom crowded with waltzing ladies and mincing dukes, through a summer landscape threatened by storm. Then the dream turns; he's told she died at his hands, prodded onto a scaffold and hanged. His wracked soul is dragged to a witches' sabbat, where he sees his love again, now hideous and cackling, delighting in his death. She yanks him into the gruesome orgy, and, writhing madly, they tumble toward Hell.

The actress, sufficiently impressed by this bizarre musical tribute, finally agreed to marry Berlioz. This is one of those charming stories of a dream come true. She quite quickly became ill, went mad and brought Berlioz misery and ruin. The BSO will perform this work four times in all: The first three performances (October 1, 2 and 5) pair it with Hans-Werner Henze's Symphony No. 8, commissioned by the BSO. The introduction of a new Henze symphony is certainly something to attract notice, but traditionalists may prefer to attend on October 8, when the Symphonie Fantastique will be paired with Berlioz's little-performed Lelio, or The Return to Life.

One of Berlioz's greatest choral works, the huge Requiem, will be given on October 21, 22 and 23 (open rehearsal on October 20). The piece is one of the most startling monuments of Romantic excess, scored for an absurdly gargantuan population of instrumentalists and singers, shot through with Berlioz's vivid and willful atheism. He wrote a Requiem mass like none written before him, an exploration of unbelief; listening to the work is rather like drifting beneath a vast, murky sea, while out of darkness ancient icons swim into view, chipped and greening. But the work, in spite of its doubt and its rapacious "Judgment" scene, is not fundamentally depressing. Berlioz chose instead to celebrate mankind's imagination, and, in particular, mankind's extraordinary creation of God in its own image.

Completely at the other end of the spectrum is his Christmas oratorio, L'Enfance du Christ, which will be performed on December 10 by the Orchestra of St. Luke's, led by Roger Norrington (known for his crisp and lively interpretations of Romantic music), featuring excellent vocal soloists like Sanford Sylvan and Lorraine Hunt. The piece essentially began as a musical sketch on a party napkin: a little chorus in an antique style. Berlioz decided to expand this into a full oratorio in the tradition of Bach or Charpentier, but as it grew he chose to give up the party-napkin medium. This is a gentle and intimate portrait of a faith that Berlioz admired and perhaps even envied.

Not everything on this fall's program is by Berlioz, however. On October 7, 9 and 12, we'll be treated to the BSO's specialty, a Mahler symphony. The Fourth, featuring Christine Schafer as soloist, will be paired with Bartok's Third Piano Concerto, featuring Krystian Zimerman. This promises to be a strong program; Ozawa's interpretations of Mahler are always interesting, though hotly debated. Bartok wrote his third and final piano concerto for his wife to take on tour and perform after his impending death. However grim the circumstances of composition, the piece itself radiates nothing but vitality and life. You'll laugh, you'll cry.

Also promising are Heinrich Schiff's reading of Schumann's sobbing Cello Concerto (November 11, 12, 13 and 16, paired with Beethoven's Fourth Symphony), and a performance of Tchaikovsky's Violin Concerto conducted by Andre Previn, featuring the fierce and lovely Anne-Sophie Mutter as soloist (November 18, 19 and 20).

On the whole, a fascinating season of Romantic hope and hallucination. What a long, strange trip it will be. ❑

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY
30 Gainsborough St., Boston and 241 St. Botolph St., Boston
The NEC offers more than 450 concerts (classical, jazz, etc.) during the 1993-94 season, and most are FREE! Call 262-1120 for a daily program

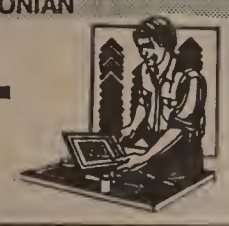
FILMS

BRATTLE THEATER
40 Brattle St., Cambridge
The Brattle Theater presents a variety of film series, from classic to cult. Through Nov. 11, Mondays are Garbo Acts!; Tuesdays are French Noir: Policiers; Wednesdays are The Films of John Woo; Thursdays are Kurosawa and Mifune; and weekends are special engagements. Themes change every few weeks. For a full program, call 876-6837.

COOLIDGE CORNER
290 Harvard St., Brookline
Huh huh, huh huh, cool, huh huh! See uncensored Beavis & Butthead episodes and much, much more at Spike & Mike's Sick and Twisted animation festival, running Thursday-Sunday through Oct. 24. You must be 18 to see this. Accessible by the Green C-line MBTA (Coolidge Corner stop), this independent first-run moviehouse with renowned art deco features boasts two screens, including the second-largest silver screen in Boston. The Coolidge specializes in presenting the works of independent, creative filmmakers from all over the world. Call 734-2500 for a program.

LASERIUM
Museum of Science
Science Park, Boston
In the tradition of Lollapalooza, the annual alternative rock concert extravaganza, the museum presents the Lollapalaser show every Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m. The show is a combination of lasers and music from groups such as Living Colour, Jane's Addiction, and the Red Hot Chili Peppers. Other days have different musical themes: for information, call 723-2500.

MUSEUM OF FINE ARTS
465 Huntington Ave., Boston
The Best of Egyptian Cinema series continues Sept. 30 with Night of Counting the Years (5:30 p.m.), about discovering a cache of royal mummies in 1881, and Alexandria, Why? (7:45 p.m.), about a man's reflections on his adolescent years during WWII. MFA hosts the premiere of Embracing Our Sexuality Oct. 3 at 1 p.m., followed by a discussion with the film's production team: the film focuses on women discussing their sexuality. The Music for Silents series continues Oct. 1 at 6 and 8 p.m. with the band Big Trouble accompanying the 1927 silent film The Unknown. The Portraits of Painters series continues Oct. 3 at 11 a.m. with Jason Berger: At the Edge of the World, about a 69-year-old Brookline man who has taught his craft for 25 years in the Boston area. And on Oct. 3 at 3 p.m., take an hour-long tour of some of the most breathtaking gardens in Japan by seeing the film Dream Windows. Call 267-9300 for ticket prices and additional film schedules.



MUSEUM OF SCIENCE
Mugar Omni Theatre, Science Park, Boston
New to the world of Omnimax is Grand Canyon: The Hidden Secrets, which runs through October. For the more tropically oriented, Omni treats you to Tropical Rainforest, a film that traces the evolution—and destruction— of one of nature's most important creations. Call 723-2500; purchasing tickets 24 hours in advance is advised.

BY ROCKIE GARDINIER — SEPTEMBER 29 - OCTOBER 12, 1993

GENERAL FORECAST: (If you know your ascendant, read it, too.)

Full moon, empty arms? The Harvest Moon on the Libraries' axis emphasizes duos, duality, deals and diplomacy through Friday night, but that Arian impulse to go it alone, to graze and play the field could be a problem.

Get past it because the rest of the weekend is pure pleasure. due to a sensual Taurus moon. The affectionate Libra sun makes everyone wanna be somebody's special playmate, Venus's willing victim. So when Venus trines Uranus and Neptune, thrills, chills and confusion somehow work in your favor, support your fondest wishes and, if you're an artist, your aesthetic values as well. Cash is freely disbursed, kisses, too. Altogether a lovely week except for a moment on Tuesday when the words you've been dying to hear cut through your psychological armor. Mercury and Mars meeting in Scorpio could also bring covert investigations or medical research to light, reveal secrets from your dark side and inspire ghostly, ghastly costume ideas for Halloween.

Even scarier stuff the weekend of the 9th, when Saturn and Pluto, the big bad boys, duke it out in a difficult square aspect. Challenges continue through Columbus Day as the Libra sun squares the Uranus-Neptune conjunction. Who takes the fall this time?

ARIES (MARCH 20-APRIL 19)

Anybody waiting on the word, the go-ahead on a deal, a wake-up call from your muse, can relax until Tuesday, which is when chatty Mercury meets your Mars ruler. That should bring plenty of paper, faxes and files to your partnership. And whila you might feel like flying solo this weekend while the Aries moon is so full, you'll quickly realize that for now, two heads are better than one. Be particularly nice to a beautiful person at work, the gym or health food store; this kind soul can be a big help.

TAURUS (APRIL 20-MAY 20)

Once again you get to enjoy "the time of your time." In June, when your loving Venus ruler was in Taurus making you feel good about yourself and your career goals, there wasn't much activity in your house of romance. However, this week Venus in that cherishad location trines Uranus and Neptune at the top of your chart and sees that your lovelife and your other life complement each other, gratify your ego and spruce up your image. Artists are exposed to welcome surprises and what seems to be "divine" intervention.

GEMINI (MAY 21-JUNE 20)

One more brilliant perception, when your Mercury ruler joins forces with fearless Mars as the week begins, and then there's no stopping you. (Well, not until Mercury turns retrograde on the 25th—consider this fair warning.) So, with energy and desire propelling you forward, take the initiative, go for the jugular, make your points and then split. Because romance and other risky entertainments are especially appealing, slightly dangerous and totally addictive right now, it would be wise to maintain some sort of balance.

CANCER (JUNE 21-JULY 22)

Full-moon fever raging in your head? Heating up the hormones? Your best (new?) bet for romance and recreation can be found at the neighborhood newsstand or your best friend's table. Candidates for your affections this week are good-looking, remarkably clean, wall-dressed and crafty, because, for a change, loving Venus wants Crabs to have the cream of the crop. This improvement in planetary vibrations will not last longer than a week, so enjoy pleasant, peaceful relations and these pretty people while you can.

LEO (JULY 23-AUGUST 22)

Most of the benefits Venus brings us hapless mortals this week land in your money house. Be prepared to give and receive the best, not necessarily the most expensive stuff. Swapmeeters stumble upon mind-boggling surprises, shoppers fall in love. Artists are inspired to create works that work and sell well too. Sheer joy? Not quite. A certain amount of brain power is called for as the week begins and you have to dig up dirt on a topic or a person you normally wouldn't touch with a 10-foot pole.

VIRGO (AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22)

Popular, poised and about as pretty as you get. Venus in your sign attracts both weird and wonderful people and projects, so don't let your sublime good taste fail you now—discriminate. Artistic types find enormous satisfaction in their latest creation, a new game or an old-fashioned romance. Life seems lovely and easygoing, a respite from the day-to-day cares, but if you need to feed an anxiety to feel alive, look into a financial matter that's been puzzling you. Solve it on the 12th.

LIBRA (SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22)

Birthday bliss and not only because the sun is highlighting your day. No, the cause of such joy is your loving Venus ruler soothing the erratic scene at home, with other family members. Finally, you get a real reward to go along with peaca of mind. Some Librans buy something great for the house, some buy a great house, some house a great guest. Whatever makes you feel good is exactly what you need. Remember this week and its blessings; they'll return in mid-January after the holiday rush.

SCORPIO (OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21)

Incisive and insightful, sharp-tongued, sarcastic and super-smart. This is what happens when Mercury's mental power merges with your Mars co-ruler as it does early in the work week. Discoveries are made, self-exploration becomes salf-explanatory as you journey through past history. If you're interested in past lives as well, this is a good time to investigate Your social life becomes more interesting as friendly people do nice things for you and your siblings. What's tha connection?

SAGITTARIUS (NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21)

The full moon in fiery Aries raises your spirit and expectations for the weekend activities, so the enjoyment you get from every little thing that happens could have some "higher" meaning. (Other than getting you high.) A woman prominent in your profession can be a big help financially—either easing the corporate purse strings or ensuring that what you buy for yourself is the best of show. Take a chance, break new ground, introduce (ingratiate) yourself into a social scene that feels like a secret society.

CAPRICORN (DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20)

The Harvest moon weaves its magic spell on cardinal signs like yours, the babes born as the seasons change. You become enlightened about a career matter and how it could affect your homelife. Some of the info may be unpleasant, but fight for your right to know the truth anyway. Only pleasure and praise midweek as loving Venus trines (supports) the planets in Capricorn that are moving you along, shaking up your idea of yourself. This change is healthy and pleasant, the squares to those planets on the 11th are not. Keep cool.

AQUARIUS (JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18)

When it's not being weird or disruptive, life can be simple and lovely as it is this week. While Venus trines your Uranus ruler midweek, you'll feel delicious, desirable and appreciated, too. How you manage to cash in is not quite clear, but since Venus is in Virgo, it'll be done with impeccable taste. Sexual favors, more power and other people's money are rewards for enduring the ups and downs of the past year. Don't blow them by being too nosy, too aggressive. Somebody should tell Boris Yeltsin, Aquarian extraordinaire, not to take risks on the 11th.

PISCES (FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19)

Ask for the money owed, the favor promised. As Mercury and Mars meet in Scorpio, you'll know intuitively just how bold you can be, how persistently you can push. With affable Venus in your marriage house, coloring everyone's view of you in pretty pastels, you'd have to be truly disgusting to offend. The only things that might turn us off is your gooey romanticism, goofy idealism and artsy-fartsy aesthetics. These traits might get totally out of hand on the 11th. Expect to be slapped down then.

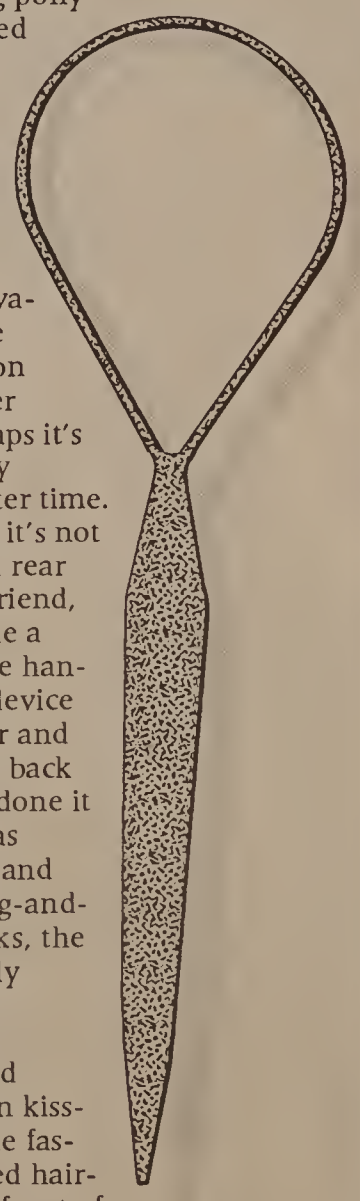
BRATTON!

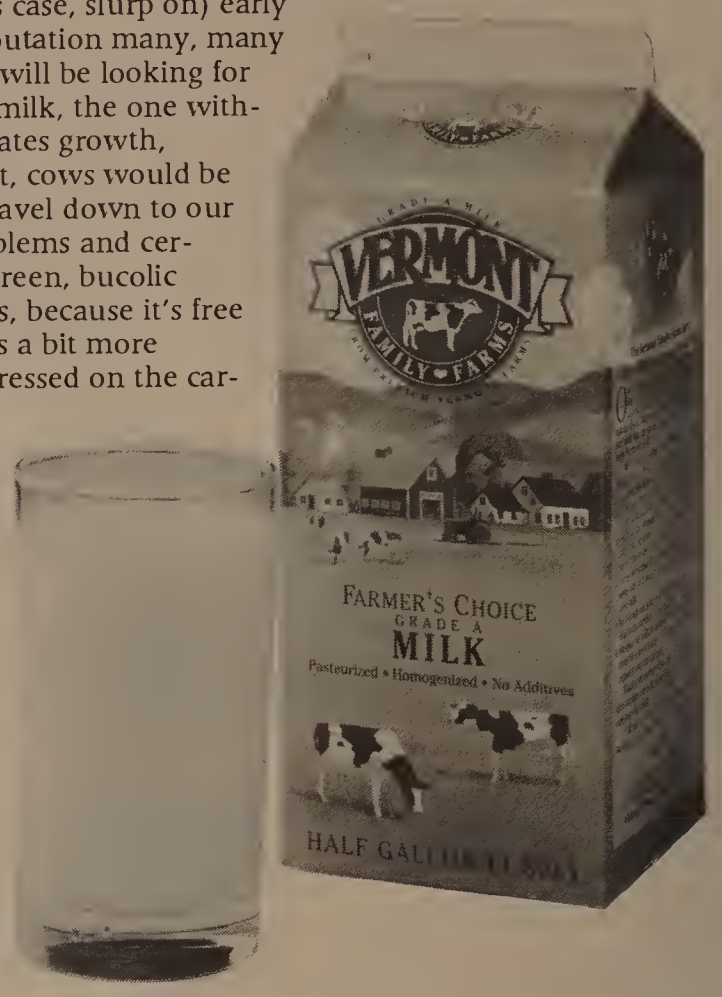


Top Cop and the BPD's Force of Change

The Conspicuous Consumer

by Mopsy Strange Kennedy

O Tell Me How Is Fancy Flipped?



Looking rather like some sort of IUD for a cow, this creator of the inward-looking pony-tail has swept, brushed and flicked the nation—and its long hair. And, no, it is not the invention of my sister. But the Topsytail produces the most graceful, feminine, gently curvaceous effect since the more billowing Gibson Girl hairdo of another century's turn; perhaps it's a way of symbolically returning to that softer time. You simply (actually it's not all that simple, and a rear mirror, better yet a friend, should be used) make a ponytail and stick the handle of the Topsytail device up the furrow of hair and thread your ponytail back through it. Hillary's done it (with the hair she has left); so have Vanna and Ivana. The more long-and-rainy your given locks, the more soft and sweetly knotted the results. Topsytail's inventor, Tomima Edmark, had written two books on kissing when she became fascinated by the twisted hairdo of the woman in front of her in line for a movie ("When Harry Met Sally"), and, being a knitter, fiddled with circular needles for an hour until Tomima Met Her Fortune. Five million have been sold to the tune of $50 million. Like braided bread, the plain effect lends itself to numerous variations, which come in a book that may justify the price of something that costs 50 cents to manufacture.

How Now Natural Cow

That primal, comforting, most numinous of liquids—our first, in fact, milk—is currently embroiled in a controversy between dairy farmers who favor BGH (Bovine Growth Hormone, also called BST) and purists who don't. The purity crowd—and the merely cautious who don't want to sign on (or in this case, slurp on) early to something that might develop a bad reputation many, many white-mustached glasses down the road—will be looking for Vermont Family Farms Premium-Quality milk, the one without BGH. This hormone artificially stimulates growth, which can be udder-unfriendly. As a result, cows would be treated with antibiotics that would then travel down to our innocent and hopeful glasses, causing problems and certainly anxiety. A solution is to go for the green, bucolic milk carton labeled Vermont Family Farms, because it's free of the hormone and the worry. The milk is a bit more expensive, but the ecological idealism expressed on the carton—both about the cows and the customers—is comforting. You've heard, perhaps, of Ben and Jerry? Although of course "big," they are part of this group, and therefore also participants in something small, endangered and precious—the family farm.

Thinking About Thinking

Outside of philosophy or logic courses in the glassed-in environment of college, many of us have no watchbird observing our own thought processes. But something known as 'Critical Thinking' has turned into a movement in which logic, modes of reasoning and argument analysis are the order of the day, offering their tools to all sorts of fields—education, computers, English, psychology, not to mention simply thinking about ones' life, beliefs, and values. As an introduction, this book 'Conversations With Critical Thinkers' was produced by the Whitman Institute, a nonprofit that is concerned with large life concerns. The word 'critical' implies both significance and alert scrutiny. The educators, writers, psychologists, etc. interviewed here discuss the ways that rigor, curiosity, an adept grasp of the abstract, a good nose for incongruities, and a developed ability to truly enter into other perspectives, or different sides of an argument than ones' own (this without resorting to debater-like rigidity of outlook) make up this thing called Critical Thinking, but each heavy-hitter interviewee has his or her unique take on it. And though this is the land of the rational, where the sinews of clear and deep thinking are developed, the emotions and the unconscious have their place here too, as does the virtue of keeping alive fruitful uncertainty on the road to problem-solving.

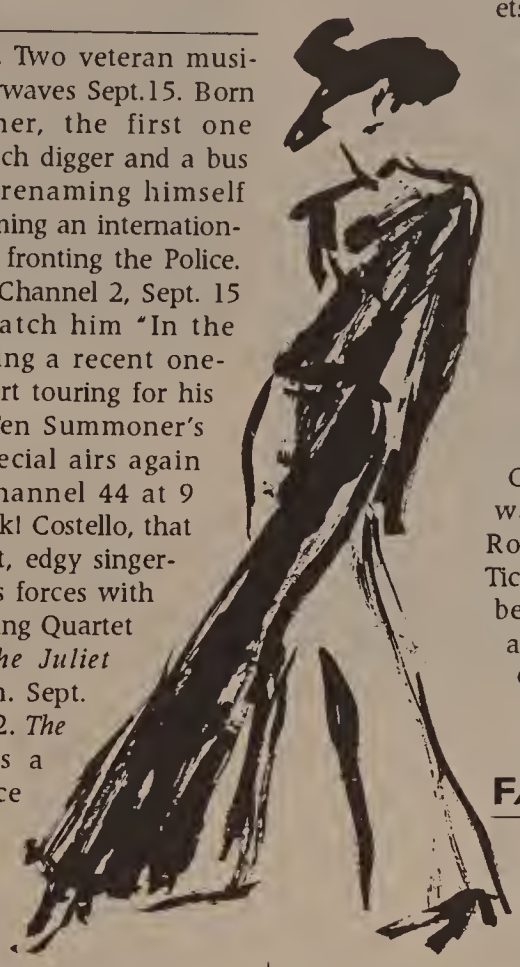
COMEDY

Bobcat Goldthwait. Wildman Goldthwait checks himself into Nick's Comedy Stop to unleash his extremely individual sense of humor September 24 -25. Featured on the TV hit show Married With Children and films such as Scrooged, and his own mime-bashing Shakes the Clown (heralded as the Citizen Kane of alcoholic-clown movies), Goldthwait should be a howl. Tickets are $16. Call 482-0930 for information.

MOVIES



The Real McCoy. Kim Basinger stars as Karen McCoy, a professional cat burglar who wants to hang up her catsuit and go straight. The problem? She's too good to retire, according to her former associates, and she soon finds herself banking on her professional skills to pull off the heist of a lifetime: $18 mil. In cash. The Real McCoy opens Sept. 17.

"Garbo Acts!," the Brattle Theater's enticing Sunday night series, showcases the face and voice of one of the most beautiful and mysterious actresses in the history of cinema. Starting September 19 with her first talkie, Anna Christie (in which Greta Garbo delighted audiences with her unforgettable opening line: "Gif me a whiskey, ginger ale on the side ... and don't be stingy, baby."), the program also includes Queen Christina and Ninotchka. For information, call 876-6837.

TELEVISION

Tune into Two. Two veteran musicians hit the airwaves Sept.15. Born Gordon Sumner, the first one worked as a ditch digger and a bus driver before renaming himself Sting and becoming an international pop celebrity fronting the Police. Flip to WGBH, Channel 2, Sept. 15 at 9 p.m. to catch him "In the Spotlight" during a recent one-hour live concert touring for his new album, "Ten Summoner's Tales." The special airs again Sept. 16 on Channel 44 at 9 p.m. Elvis is back! Costello, that is. The eloquent, edgy singer-songwriter joins forces with the Brodsky String Quartet to perform The Juliet Letters at 10 p.m. Sept. 15 on Channel 2. The Juliet Letters is a "song sequence for string quartet and voice" inspired by a newspaper item about a Veronese teacher who answered letters from the public addressed to Juliet Capulet, the tragic heroine of Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet. The show airs again Sept. 17 at 9 p.m. on Channel 44.

Bratton

The New Force Behind Boston's Police

By Christopher Francescani

Inside the Boston Police Department Headquarters, an extensive internal cleanup is taking place. Fresh coats of paint are being splashed over peeling walls; floors thick with generations of grime and muck are being buffed until they shimmer; a new air-conditioning system cools the sweltering halls and stairwells of the old building at 154 Berkeley St.

Supervising the spring cleaning is newly minted Commissioner William J. Bratton, the former No. 2 man recently promoted to the top post at the BPD. When Francis "Mickey" Roache resigned in June to run for mayor, then Superintendent-in-Chief Bratton must have let out a massive sigh of relief when he heard the news: He had attained a lifelong career goal.

Having rocketed through the ranks—at 34, he was the youngest ever to rise to second-in-command of the department—in 1982 Bratton was next in line for the commissioner's job, when he was demoted—according to local legend—after having made some improvident remarks about his ambitions. "My personal goal is to become commissioner," he had told Boston Magazine earlier that year. "Be it one year or four years, that's what I want."

Now, 23 years after he entered the Boston Police Academy, Commissioner Bratton is finally and unequivocally in a position to reinvent one of the most troubled public departments in the city.

From all indications, Bratton seems capable of doing just that.

His resume is impeccable. The typically skeptical New York Times has heralded his hands-on leadership style. Wherever he works, he generates respect as a tough, intelligent and effective leader, gaining a reputation for excellence by pulling slipshod organizations back from the edge of collapse and redirecting them toward success. Only Bratton's ambition supersedes his abilities. His career in law enforcement is a testament to the concept of ambitious self-promotion, both of himself and of his department. There is no one who believes in Bill Bratton as much as Bill Bratton.

"I'm living proof that even in the most politicized worlds, that you can get ahead on ambition, talent, skill and knowing how to play the game in what I feel is an appropriate way by how you position yourself.

"I've never dropped a dime to any campaign. I've never kissed anyone's ass in this city or anywhere in this country. I'm good at what I do, but I have the satisfaction of sitting in this chair, knowing I earned it."

Tracy Aguiar

MORNING COFFEE: New Commissioner William Bratton scopes the news and the regulars at a favorite morning haunt, the Freedom Trail Coffee Shop.

In typical Bratton style, his first move on June 30, 1993, was to embark on a whirlwind high-profile cop campaign: introducing newly marked cruisers, shiny badges and uniforms, a pricey Crime Scene van, and high-tech equipment, such as an electronic fingerprinter, to resurrect morale and jettison the department into the 1990s.

"I think I know cops," says Bratton. "I know what turns them on, know what motivates them, and I'm willing to take the hits from the Howie Carrs of the world for the uniforms, and the cars, and that type of stuff, because that's what motivates cops.

"You'll see a lot of new cars, a lot of new radios, new computers, because you've got to take care of the internal situation, and the happier those cops are, the better they're going to treat the public."

Some critics contend that what they see as merely a marketing campaign to make the new boss look good is peripheral to the real issues—such as the lack of a contract for more than three years, the entrenched political bureaucracy in the department, and the firestorm of drugs and violent crime sweeping through big cities across America.

However, advocates of the commissioner's plans see it as typical Bratton renovation: A rush of momentum within the department to ease it through the larger, often-difficult transformations Bratton believes are necessary to its growth.

"He identifies with the average police officer," says one cop who has worked under Bratton. "He gets out there himself, he talks to the officers one on one, and he finds out what their needs are—and he does that through all the different ranks...He addresses those needs so that they have the safest environment, so that they can protect the city."

Installed in January of last year as superintendent-in- chief, the No. 2 position in the department, which he had held previously in the early 1980's under Commissioner Joseph Jordan, Bratton was viewed as the last hope of reviving an organization fairly drowning amid widespread contentions of misconduct and mismanagement.

Conditions were such that former Mayor Ray Flynn, prompted by an unflattering Globe series published in the spring of 1991, commissioned attorney James D. St. Clair of the law firm Hale & Dorr to investigate police professionalism at the BPD.

"I've never dropped a dime to any campaign. I've never kissed anyone's ass in this city or anywhere in this country. I'm good at what I do, but I have the satisfaction of sitting in this chair, knowing I earned it."

The St. Clair commission found that an absence of leadership and vision had resulted in "divisive 'turf wars' between different segments of the Department" and an inability to "implement new programs or effectively manage many existing [ones]." The report recommended that "a new Police Commissioner with vision and experience be appointed when Commissioner Roache's current term expires in April 1992." The report was submitted to the mayor in January 1992.

Two weeks after the release of the report, Bratton was brought in as the No. 2 man.

"Community policing," largely a buzz word during the Roache administration, has been a part of Bratton's philosophy of policing since the early eighties, when he fought and won a lawsuit against the police unions to gain authority to split up existing patrols into one-man units. The move freed up several hundred officers who were redistributed throughout the department on mounted, motorcycle and foot patrols. Without spending a single tax dollar Bratton was able to increase demonstrably the Boston's police's presence in the public eye.

More than a decade later, Bratton continues to argue the case for more cops, calling for 300 more.

"I don't need those cops to knock the crime rate down. The crime rate is going down. I'm feeling pretty good about the climate, but I don't have the resources to address fear, and if I can't address fear ... would people in Boston feel any better? No."

"[Fear] is so amorphous. How do you corral a cloud? How do you corral fear and deal with it? One of the essentials to stabilize the situation is more cops."

Since the 1982 lawsuit, the police unions have accused Bratton of compromising their members' safety by splitting them into single-man units. The department responded by prioritizing 911 calls, sending "rapid response" two-man units to crimes in progress.

The president of the Police Patrolman's Association, Richard Bradley, opposed the plan, calling it "utopian." He points out that the BPD is perennially understaffed, and calls to 911 inevitably back up, forcing the department to send individual officers out to respond to potentially dangerous situations.

"Most of our officers who have been injured have been on one-man patrols," he maintains.

Bradley, head of the largest of the three police unions, constituting about 1,500 of the approximately 1,900 Boston police officers, says that while he and his fellow officers would like to stand behind their new commissioner, Bratton must first put his feet on the ground and get down to the real issues.

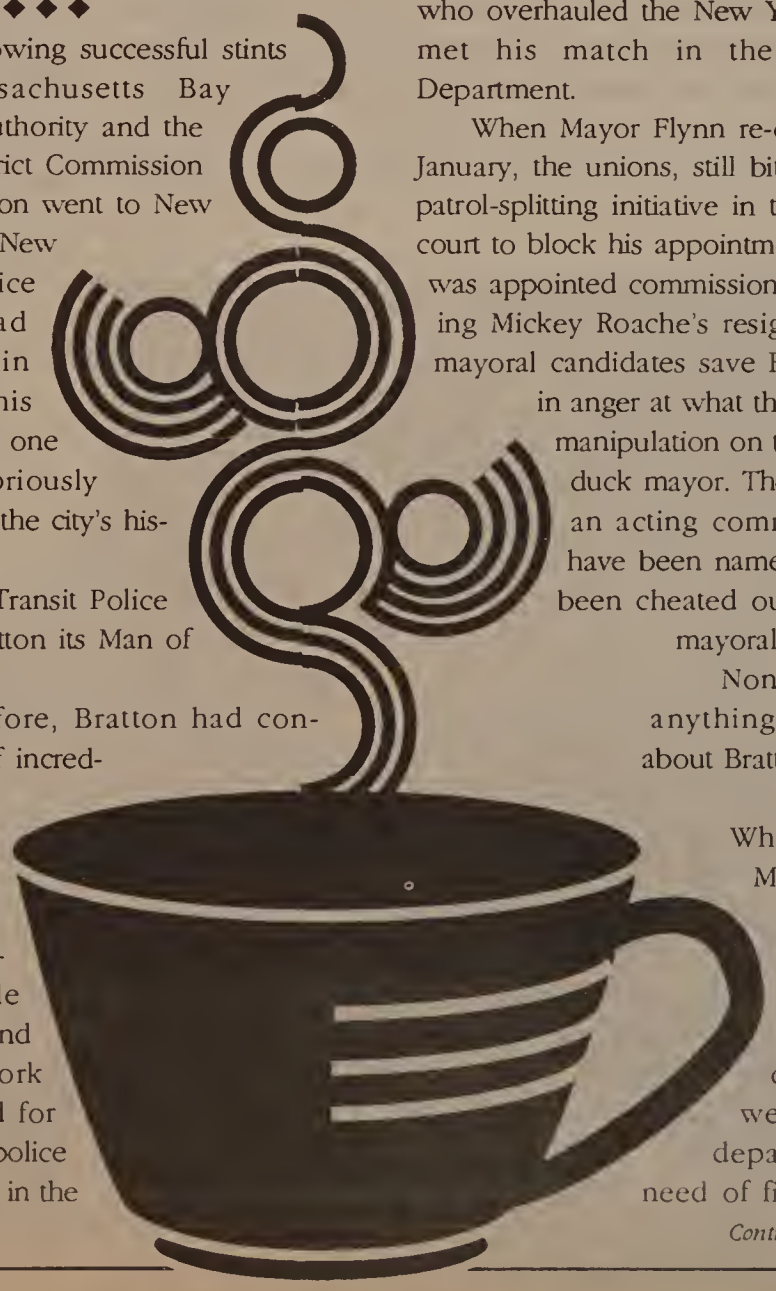
"Don't get me wrong," Bradley explains. "My people would like to get on board with him. We think he's got some good ideas."

Most crucial, according to Bradley, is the issue of a new contract. The Boston Police Department has gone without a contract for more than three years, pitting the ranks of Boston police officers against the new commissioner since he took office in June.

Referring to him as "an obstructionist," Bratton "really dropped the ball on [contract negotiations]," says Bradley.

While Bradley neglects to acknowledge that the police-department contract is negotiated with City Hall and not the commissioner, Bratton willingly concedes that "the [City] Hall will not do anything without my acquiescence in terms of working conditions. The money end of it the Hall controls completely, but working-conditions issues are things that I and my command staff will get involved with."

Asked if he expects an agreement to be reached in the coming months, Bratton replies, "I would be surprised if it isn't."



Not having a contract is costing Bratton, says Bradley. "I can't market his [neighborhood-policing] plan without a contract. [Bratton] hasn't got the support of 1500 officers. I know I do. Nothing can be done without their support, and he doesn't have it."

In 1989, following successful stints with the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority and the Metropolitan District Commission police force, Bratton went to New York to head the New York Transit Police amid widespread skepticism within the ranks over his ability to manage one of the most notoriously troubled forces in the city's history.

In 1991, the Transit Police Union named Bratton its Man of the Year.

The year before, Bratton had convinced an array of incredulous NYC officials to let him arm his subway cops with Glock 9mm pistols, a significant upgrade from the six- round revolvers New York cops have carried for years. The transit police were the first force in the city, with the exception of special units, ever to carry the 9mms.

NYPD Lieutenant Detective Jack Maple explains, "It really became an uphill battle. The NYPD was not recommending it, the police commissioner at that time, Lee Brown, was against it, the deputy police commissioner at that time, Ray Kelly, was against it.

"Bratton had to build a case and show the advantages of the 9mm to not only City Hall, but to the MTA board and the Commissioner's Office, and he had to persevere in dealing with the editors of all the major newspapers. So, it was really dramatic that he was able to accomplish that."

On August 20 of this year, New York Police Commissioner Ray Kelly and Mayor David Dinkins announced that the New York Police Department would begin distributing the Glock 9mm pistols to its officers, replacing the standard 6 round revolvers.

Bratton's reputation for rehabilitative leadership has become nationally recognized. On August 12, 1993, President Clinton invited Bratton and a handful of other police executives to a Rose Garden unveiling of the president's new crime program, and Bratton's name has appeared on short lists for top-cop positions in major cities throughout the country.

Back in Boston, some contend, the man who overhauled the New York Transit Police met his match in the Boston Police Department.

When Mayor Flynn re-called Bratton last January, the unions, still bitter over Bratton's patrol-splitting initiative in the '80s, fought in court to block his appointment. And when he was appointed commissioner in June following Mickey Roache's resignation, all of the mayoral candidates save Roache spoke out in anger at what they saw as political manipulation on the part of a lame-duck mayor. They contended that an acting commissioner should have been named, and felt they'd been cheated out of a significant mayoral appointment.

None, however, had anything critical to say about Bratton.

after, Bratton says he has no favorite for the Mayor's race. He would "work well with any of them."

In each of his three previous efforts—the MBTA police, the Metropolitan District Commission force, and the New York City transit police—Bratton has received the money to implement his ambitious plans He now faces a tight budget and a winnowing pool of officers: Eighty to 100 cops, five percent, of the force have been retiring per year without replenishment for the last three years.

Bratton isn't worried. He will petition Washington for the money to buy more cops.

"The big bucks are in Washington. The state has only so much money to spend, the city has no money to spend ....The typical way Washington operates is: "We'll give Boston a grant to study youth violence, we'll give L.A. a grant to study .... What I'm going to be proposing to Boston is that I will offer the BPD as an experimental site to do everything, all at once.

"I'm offering Boston up as a big laboratory. Let's do everything in Boston."

While Bratton is widely considered to be the best man for the job here in Boston, his unabashed ambition has elicited skepticism throughout the department over whether or not the commissioner is committed to his position.

Where he will go from here, if anywhere, is anyone's guess, although sources watching Bratton closely seem to be winking and smiling, with one finger on their lips and another pointing toward City Hall, where an 11-year incumbency (read: power base) has recently been vacated with Ray Flynn's political passing-on to the "next world" of Vatican politics.

One officer reports that, "Everyone's wondering where Bratton is going to be hanging his hat next week. I don't even think he knows."

But Bratton dismisses any talk about his keeping his bags packed and his resume ready.

"(Staying on) is my intent," says Bratton, "I don't see anything at this time that would pull me away.

"This is going to happen."

Skepticism remains in this city, which has watched a half-dozen commissioners come and go in 20 years. "(Bratton) claims some people think that he can walk on water," notes a veteran officer. "We would like to see him do it. Providing the department with the reforms it needs and restoring morale would be equal to walking on water."

The messianic mantle has been placed on Bratton before. The successful reform of the BPD is the toughest job he has ever faced—do you believe in miracles?

Tune into Theatre

Downtown theaters take note of musicals this fall.

SOUTHERN STARS: Ebony Jo-ann, Mona Wyatt and Melody Garrett star in From the Mississippi Delta, which opens at the Huntington Theatre Company September 15.

Song and Dance

Musicals, old and new, kick off the downtown theater season this year: 42nd Street returns to Boston September 28-October 10 at the Colonial Theatre. The Tony Award-winning musical Falsettos, by William Finn and James Lapine, plays October 12-31. The Wilbur re-lights October 1 with Five Guys Named Moe, a song-and-dance celebration featuring the music of jazz-great Louis Jordan. The musical runs through October 31. Miss Saigon, meanwhile, continues performances at the Wang Center until October 9.

Brady Bunch

The Real Life Brady Bunch, the staged presentation of the popular 1970s TV series with an all-adult cast, begins performances at the Charles Playhouse Thursday. A different television episode will be presented every other week. The rest of each evening is filled out with The Real Live Game Show, an original segment where contestants chosen from the audience compete for prizes.

ART Fall Schedule

The American Repertory Theatre's eclectic Fall Festival begins with Time on Fire, actor Evan Handler's monodrama about sickness, health and the medical establishment. Time on Fire runs through Sunday. Performance artist Karen Finley appears in her latest provocative work, A Certain Level of Denial, Monday and Tuesday. Eric Bogosian's revamped "Dog Show (Pounding Nails on the Floor With My Forehead)" plays September 22-26. Sandra Reaves and the All Star Jazz Band present The Late Great Ladies of Blues and Jazz September 28-October 9. This is her musical tribute to Ma Rainey, Bessie Smith, Ethel Waters, Billie Holiday, Dinah Washington and Mahalia Jackson.

Boston Premiere

The Boston premiere of Dr. Endesha Ida Mae Holland's exuberant autobiographical play, From the Mississippi Delta, kicked off the season at the Huntington Theatre Company last week. Filled with the music, humor and rich language of the deep South, the work portrays one woman's personal triumph over poverty and oppression amid the turbulence and challenges of the Civil Rights era. Three actresses, Ebony Jo-Ann, Mona Wyatt and Melody Carrett, portray all the characters —black and white, Northern and Southern, male and female—across a 40-year period ending in the 1980s. Kenny Leon, artistic director of Atlanta's Alliance Theatre Company, directs. The play runs through October 10.

Family Dramas

The New Repertory Theatre in Newton Highlands is also beginning the season tomorrow with a play about an African-American family. Cheryl L. West's Jar the Floor is a tender, funny story of four generations preparing for their great-grandmother's 90th birthday. Amid the preparations and family bickering, they each learn about their expectations, aspirations and disappointments. The work, which runs through October 24, has already enjoyed successful productions in Chicago and Washington D.C.

Nora Theatre

In Cambridge, the Nora Theatre Company is presenting Michael Weller's Spoils of War through October 2. The play is set in post-World War II New York, where a teen-age boy dreams of reuniting with his parents but finds that their revolutionary idealism has given way to alienation and self-involvement. Daniel Gidron directs the six-person cast.

Trinity Repertory

The Trinity Repertory Company in Providence, R.I., is presenting the world premiere of Mrs. Sedgewick's Head as its season opener. This "dark and funny take on loyalty, betrayal and the movie business" is by company actor Tom Griffin (author of The Boys Next Door) and plays Friday through October 24.

New Horovitz Play

The second season at Sudbury's Chiswick Park Theatre begins with the Kander-Ebb dance musical Chicago, which plays through October 3. Fighting Over Beverley, Israel Horovitz's latest play in his Gloucester series, is on view at the Gloucester Stage Company through September 26. The title, by the way, refers to one of the characters, not the nearby North Shore town. ❑

ART AND MONEY: Twentysomething art student Andrew Berger jumped at the opportunity to make $100 a day as an extra on the set of Blown Away.

Andrew Berger

Extra! Extra! Read all about him

BY NICOLE L. MILLS

Twenty-three-year-old Andrew Berger sits on a bench in 95-degree heat on the set of the movie Blown Away, where he is working as an extra. He looks out from under the beginnings of the dreadlocks he is twisting on his head, and says, "I'm fearless at making changes."

Three years ago, Berger, who was at that time a social-psychology/political-science major in the first semester of his senior year at the University of Rochester, had a revelation. He was not going to go to law school, as he had lightly assumed throughout his college career. He was going to be an artist. Was this merely a responsibility-avoidance maneuver typical of a member of the X Generation? Another "Gee, Mom and Dad, I don't want a solid, money-making career—I want to go find myself and do something artistic and interesting?"

Berger smiles at the thought that his early-life crisis was motivated by the drifting purposelessness that seems to overcome so many twentysomethings. His decision took many months to make, but was all the more firm for its having taken so much deliberation. "I always knew that I wanted to do this, but I didn't let myself know that I knew," he says. He moved to Boston and enrolled in the Museum School, an experience that was "... like Candyland; you got to play with everything, touch everything, use all the tools."

Berger turns out his prodigious works in various styles and media. He creates everything from huge, computer-graphics-produced canvases to small, intricate woodcuts and bold acrylic and collage works. He is currently showing at the Framery in Cambridge, and several local galleries, including the North End's Gallery Absinthe, are also interested in his work.

Berger doesn't see himself making another drastic life change any time soon. Art has become his life, and this is definitely how he wants it. But life is a twisting stream, and he doesn't want to burn any bridges or close any doors along the way. Despite his commitment to his art, Berger says, "How I want to live my life is like how I found the movie. I was walking down the street to feed the meter for my car, and this guy said, 'How'd you like to make $100 a day?' I said 'Sure,' and here I am."

A Few Good Girls

Moved by hip-hop

BY MEGAN GILMARTIN

James Brown may hold the title as the hardest-working man in show business, but Boston's own hip-hop dance troupe, A Few Good Girls, is closing in right behind him. These four sisters of Alpha Chi Funk, Sherry Michelsen, Kristen Burke, Andrea Salerno and Alyssa Perry, have been performing together for less than seven months and already have earned a reputation as being a unique, versatile and hard-working troupe.

"The group has definitely taken off in the short amount of time we've been together," says the group's manager/dancer Sherry Michelson. "I think it's because people get excited when they watch us; it's like going to Disney World." Assistant manger/dancer Kristen Burke adds, "We all have so much energy on stage that people can't help but watch us and get into it."

Warming up in meat lockers and performing on surfaces that are soaked with beer or riddled with rock fragments isn't exactly what one would expect from dancers who have been formally trained in ballet and modern dance. But, as the Girls explain, it's all part of the sacrifice you make when you're dancing on the cutting edge. While they all acknowledge and appreciate their classical roots, they can't help but touch on that certain quality that draws them to a funkier beat.

"I love ballet, but it's old," explains one as the others Girls nod their heads in agreement. "Hip-hop is more of a primal dance."

Searching for the time to pump out fresh choreography while they try to hold down full-time day jobs and college careers is the biggest obstacle the Girls must overcome. Also difficult is creating exciting, original new works and at the same time tightening their old pieces. According to dancers/choreographers Andrea and Alyssa Perry, one of their techniques is to incorporate simple, everyday gestures and churn them into movements that are unique to the group.

"I see choreography everywhere," explains Salerno, "I walk down the street and I see someone scratch their ear and it's in my next piece."

The Girls are all self-described perfectionists. So much so that they insisted on training with the Army National Guard to prepare for their opening number, which involves a military rifle drill.

"We all want our performance to be very tight and clean," Salerno says. "We'll stop a rehearsal to ask if it's open-hand or closed," adds Michelsen.

The Girls are not limited to live performances. They can also be seen funking their way through the halls of Massachusetts public schools on a videotape that teaches young students how a bill becomes a law. "We're really proud of each other and our accomplishments," Michelsen says.

Adds Salerno, "We are so fortunate to be able to do what we love. This group makes my life!"

TROUPERS: The members of dance troupe A Few Good Girls were trained classically but prefer the "primal" nature of hip-hop. "I love ballet, but it's old," says one of the Girls.

FLICKS IN A FLASH

Highlights of the Ninth Annual BOSTON FILM FESTIVAL by John Hall

This year's Boston Film Festival, running from September 13-23 and now in its ninth year, has captured a number of new films by some of the most respected directors working outside of mainstream Hollywood. For the Bostonian attuned to the independent and foreign-film scene, many of these names recall some of the best films of the last few years: Mike Leigh, Stephen Frears, Diane Kurys, Abel Ferrara, Krzysztof Kieslowski, Nancy Savoca and David Cronenberg.

The festival offers a nice mix of American and international films, with some works by promising new directors such as Richard Linklater, Victor Nunez and Jay Craven. For the second year, the festival includes a laudable sidebar of eight films addressing human rights issues worldwide that are distributed by the Human Rights Watch organization. Several directors and actors are expected to make appearances.

Only two significant caveats prevent this festival from being one that Bostonians can truly enjoy: first, the quality of the festival entries continues, as in years past, to be highly variable, with amateurish dreck filling out much of the schedule; second, there is the usual dearth of female directors represented in the festival (three out of 44 directors.) The festival committee could do better on both counts.

While many of the films by the above-mentioned directors had not been screened by press-time, expectations run high. Mike Leigh, surely a great director of actors, brings his latest film, Naked, to Boston after winning awards for directing and best actor (David Thewlis) at Cannes. Another winner at Cannes, Chen Kaige's Farewell to My Concubine, which shared the Palme d'Or, will be making an appearance.

Stephen Frears, after a disappointing excursion to Hollywood with Hero, returns to his roots with The Snapper, an adaptation of Roddy Doyle's (The Commitments) novel about an Irish family disrupted by their pregnant daughter's refusal to name the father of her child. Cronenberg brings his creepy-yet-humane sensibility to David Henry Hwang's adaptation of his acclaimed play M. Butterfly, a Ripley's Believe-It-or-Not story if there ever was one. The still-hot Jeremy Irons is cast against John Lone. Another well-known horror-/schlock-meister, Abel Ferrara, will be showing his re-make of a re-make, Body Snatchers—this time set on a military base.

Look for a decidedly more feminine sensibility in new films by Nancy Savoca and Diane Kurys. Savoca's Household Saints drops in on three generations of Italian-American women trying to live together in post-war Little Italy. Love After Love (Apres L'Amour), Kurys's latest, follows the love life of a female novelist, played by Isabelle Huppert. Also promising from the female perspective is Blue, directed by Kieslowski, starring Juliette Binoche as a woman trying to pull her life together after losing her husband and child in an accident.Finally, the festival will be the scene of Robert De Niro's directorial debut, A Bronx Tale. Going with what he knows best. De Niro plays the father of a 9-year-old boy attracted to the lifestyle of the neighborhood mobster.Following are the pick of the litter of films screened to date:

Dazed and Confused

Richard Linklater, director

Perhaps this year's funniest bit of nostalgia, this ode to the '70s is an irrefutable argument that that decade was the nadir of fashion. Linklater, director of the microbudget cult-hit Slacker, takes his Generation X sensibility and relocates it to 1976, probing the endless search for beer, bongs and sex among the new seniors and incoming freshmen of a mid-America high school. It may not be as good as the two films it most closely resembles—American Graffiti and Fast Times at Ridgemont High—but it fills their generation gap nicely. A must for '70s hard-rock aficionados.

Living Proof: HIV and the Pursuit of Happiness

Kermit Cole, director

Living Proof documents the lives of the cheery HIV-positive people captured in Carolyn Jones's extraordinary black-and-white photographs, which counter the usual AIDS image of doom and gloom. The film attempts to put a happy face on those living full lives despite HIV, and it is somewhat convincing, at least for these individuals. The array of "victims"—gays, heterosexuals, mothers, fathers, children, Boy Scouts, policemen, the homeless, the wealthy —again shows how AIDS does not discriminate. Living Proof is a bit long and redundant at 70 minutes.

Ruby in Paradise

Victor Nunez, director

A big winner at Sundance, this rather slight film captures the ennui of off-season life in a Florida beach town like few other films. Ruby (the beautiful Ashley Judd) is a rudderless twentysomething, seeking both questions and answers as she bumbles along on her own as a clerk in a souvenir shop. Over the course of the very leisurely paced film, she learns a few things about her ambitions and needs; for example, she could do without the men she meets. Nunez shows that some male directors can capture the female sensibility.

Where the Rivers Flow North

Jay Craven, director

An excellent adaptation of Howard Frank Mosher's novella about a cantankerous Vermont logger, Noel Lord (Rip Torn), who refuses to sell out to the power company that wants to build a dam on his land. In his directorial feature debut, Jay Craven has made an independent film that captures the stunning autumnal beauty of Vermont's woods and the depth of Mosher's intriguing characters (Torn is particularly good).

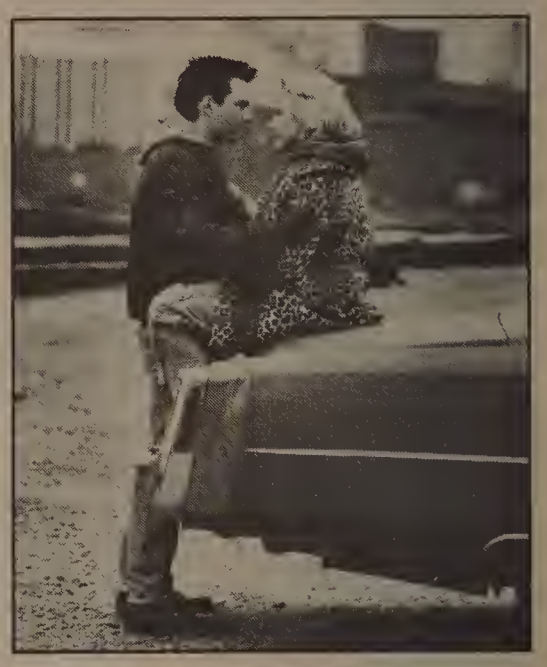
A Failed Romance

"... It thinks it's better than what it spoofs and believes that the glory and coolness of all its cultural and film references will rub off on it..."

There's a moment in True Romance that best captures the movie's spirit: Patricia Arquette picks up the top of the toilet tank and slams it over her attacker's head. In a just world, someone would do the same to the makers of this movie.



Loner Clarence (Christian Slater) and inexperienced call girl Alabama (Arquette) meet, discover they both love Elvis and kung fu movies, and marry. Alabama giggles, wiggles, and bounces in her tight pants and off-the-shoulder blouses. Clarence talks fast and acts like a heat-seeking missile. Alabama thinks Clarence is soooo cool. They make out a lot. After a bloody run-in with Alabama's pimp, the pair flees with a suitcase full of cocaine in the trunk of their purple Cadillac. They arrive in L.A. with plans to make a big score. The Mob and the LAPD have their own plans.

There is nothing fresh or cool about these two Badlands rip-offs. But what really makes you want to grab the toilet lid and start swinging is the movie's relentless, gut-wrenching violence combined with its smart-ass, we-are-soooo-cool attitude.

It must have seemed like a sure thing: a script by Quentin Tarantino that follows in the footsteps of his critically acclaimed film Reservoir Dogs and takes macho posturing and violence to its logical, absurd conclusion and a powerhouse cast that includes masters-of-the-lunatic-fringe Christopher Walken, Dennis Hopper and Gary Oldman. But director Tony Scott and Tarantino don't know when to quit.

Reservoir Dogs worked because of its tightness and deadpan delivery, which kept the staginess and the impact of the outrageous violence in check. True Romance, however, is a mess. It's loud, sloppy and pretentious. It thinks it's better than what it spoofs and believes that the glory and coolness of all its cultural and film references will rub off on it. Scott and Tarantino try to sell you on the idea of reverse coolness: Clarence and Alabama's marrying, becoming a nuclear family, and living happily ever after is so uncool, it's cool.

The toilet, genital and puke jokes fall in this category, as well. The first time we meet Clarence's friend, Dick, he's sitting on the john yelling for toilet paper. His name, of course, is an inspiration for many clever jokes. And what's funnier than a wimp puking on himself after a wild roller-coaster ride?

LOVERS ON THE RUN: Christian Slater and Patricia Arquette star in True Romance.

Among the worst scenes is a poorly executed showdown between Slater and Gary Oldman. As the music throbs, Oldman hams it up as a scar-faced pimp with dreadlocks. O for the good old days when Oldman's excesses—banging his head against a brick wall in Sid and Nancy—conveyed genuine emotion.

Another baffling confrontation involves Dennis Hopper as Clarence's good-guy, working-class dad, and Christopher Walken as a counsel to the Mob. Hopper somehow manages to maintain his dignity while goading Walken with bizarre racist taunts. The soundtrack and the insults swell and peak. Hopper to Walken: "You're part eggplant!" Walker to Hopper: "You're part cantaloupe!" Perhaps the scene is meant to show the absurdity of racism and how racism and violence are inextricably linked to eating fruits and vegetables while listening to classical music. Or, maybe, Hopper's character is nuts after all.

What's most infuriating about True Romance is that, for a moment, it makes you wonder if art that depicts violence—verbal, emotional or physical—is worth the price. If Scorsese never made Mean Streets or David Mamet never wrote American Buffalo or Glengarry Glen Ross, maybe we wouldn't have to deal with so many tough guys with New York accents shouting "FAWK YOU!" "NO, FAWK YOU, YOU FAWK!" at each other.

What to do with True Romance? Just flush. ❑

REVISIONISM ON THE RANGE

"...Politically correct agenda saddles female western..."

What kept Clint Eastwood's The Unforgiven from being a really good movie was probably what landed the film its Best Picture Academy Award: the unforgivably heavy-handed revisionism of the script. Speech after speech from traditional westerns were rewritten in the most cynical, anti-western way, and Eastwood's old-fashioned, tight-lipped, hard-butted Man With No Name became the feeble, candy-assed "Man Who Falls Off His Horse." About half-a-dozen times, Clint!

Again, the revisionism is excruciatingly self-conscious in Maggie Greenwald's The Ballad of Little Jo, which informs the audience in dozens of self-congratulatory ways that it's a woman this time who is riding the range, a woman who is coming to the rescue of stranded immigrants, a woman who is rifling bad men dead, and then, being a woman , crying over the loss of human life!

Also, there's a too-timely 1990s cross-dressing theme, Orlando in the Montana badlands, as nice girl Jo Monaghan (Suzy Amis) protects her virtue in cowpoke trousers. Finally, there is a too-obvious hint of The Crying Game, when the townsfolk, sure they've been talkin' to a fella all these years, pull off Jo's clothes and discover... OOPS, that scene is a secret!

And yet, The Ballad of Little Jo, for all its annoyances, is a pretty slick, entertaining little picture. Director Greenwald sticks with her story, for 120 minutes, and pulls it off. Suzy Amis, interestingly cast as Jo, walks a fine androgynous line between young Katharine Hepburn (schoolmarm, New England frame) and dirty old Mick Jagger (midnight-rambler lips). Bo Hopkins, acting veteran of rough Sam Peckinpah movies such as The Wild Bunch, practically steals the movie as Little Jo's blithely racist and red-neck neighbor.

Finally, there is a genuinely touching romance between Jo and her Chinese helper, Tinman (David Chung). A really nice cross-cultural love story.

Just enough good stuff to keep an audience from grumbling, "Where the hell is John Wayne?"

P.S. For those interested in films about women in the West, a few videos are worth investigating:

- The Ballad of Cable Hogue (1970), a sublime romance between ex-whore Stella Stevens and prospector Jason Robards Jr., in Sam Peckinpah's gentlest western.
- Annie Oakley (1935), in which Barbara Stanwyck's sharpshooter marries non-sexist Pat Butler (Preston Sturges), who agrees, happily, to give up his own shooting and manage her career.
- Duel in the Sun (1946), ending in an immortal love-hate shoot-out in the desert between lovers Jennifer Jones and Gregory Peck.
- Johnny Guitar (1954), an all-woman gun battle between bad Mercedes McCambridge and good Joan Crawford.

SKIN FLICK AT MFA

To this day, nice polite people are embarrassed to admit any interest in pornographic films. Suckers for pseudo-porn with lofty pretensions, they race to see X-rated movies that they can claim, if caught in the theater, are allegedly "Art."

I predict great crowds at the MFA for Tokyo Decadence, something to slip into at the end of a healthy day with Monet and Manet. Will anyone then admit what a bogus film this is, a straining-to-be-sensitive tale of a young Tokyo prostitute (Miho Nikaido) brought down, down, down by her degrading sadomasochistic trade?

There is only one reason to see this movie: skin. Well, there's not enough of that, and not enough on screen sex. Only one scene, a seemingly genuine encounter between a real dominatrix and her client, has any kind of erotic tension. As for the poor hooker, she's whiny and unhappy in the first scene and stays whiny and unhappy throughout. She should quit whoring and find a more "honorable" profession. Like filmmaking. ❑

Life's Funny Lessons

". . . The Godfather of Boston Comedy finds humor in personal experiences . . ."

Adorned in biker garb and a T- shirt that states "It's wrong but I do it anyway," "Dirty" Dick Doherty, as he is infamously called, begins his freewheeling comedy shows by "dissing everybody," hitting on such controversial subjects as child molestation and invalids. Who is this man with the striking panache and biting repartee? None other than Dick Doherty, owner of five successful local comedy clubs, whose advertising logos boast "30 Years of Leadership and Experience in New England Comedy."

Doherty's illustrious career has taken him on a whirlwind tour around the nation and through time: from happy-hour folk singing in the early '60s, to rock-n-roll with his band, the Majority, in the mid '60s, to headlining performances at New York's renowned Copa Cabana in the '70s. Doherty's music gave him the opportunity to present his comedic talents to "rooms across the country prior to the advent of the 'comedy club.'"

At the peak of his aggressive career, he owned a successful nightclub on the Cape, recorded several albums and was offered the chance to appear on national television. Ironically, Doherty describes how the same aggressiveness that made him great also left him with feelings of inadequacy that he ineffectively tried to medicate with drugs and alcohol. He realized, however, "that the drugs were like cheating: they never created anything that wasn't there inside me already."

After years of rehabilitation and rebuilding in the '80s, Doherty realized that "how you feel about yourself is not based on what you have achieved. We all have choices—some are victims of their choices; others are masters. There is no evidence that getting what you want makes you happy and that not getting what you want makes you unhappy."

These words echo the resilient nature evident in Doherty's pursuit "to do what can't be done" purely for the challenge and the fun of it, rather than for the money or fame.

He proved that he could do what others felt couldn't be done. He opened at Boston's Comedy Vault in 1987, and headlined in 1990 at the Improv in Atlantic City. Soon after Doherty's return to both the New England and the national comedy scene, he became an operating partner in a "new improvisation franchise slated for Boston" with his old friend Budd Friedman, owner of the Improvisation Comedy Club chain. The subsequent impact of Doherty's clubs on the local scene was so great, that he quickly became known as the Godfather of Boston Comedy.

He performs, he says, because he likes his audience, not because he needs them to like him. "By not walking on eggshells when speaking to my audience about taboo topics, I establish that I am not repulsed by the limitations of others, but rather enjoy the presence of everyone. I tease the audience but only to make them feel special, not to belittle them."

Perhaps this is why his comedy is so successful; he celebrates the fact that we all see things differently. "I'm here to be me—not the audience's judge; when they realize this, they have a little more permission to be themselves.

GO AHEAD, TOUCH IT: "Dirty" Dick Doherty "teases the audience ... to make them feel special."

"If the audience has had a hard day, it's my job to get them out of their bad mood. I want to party with them. I do the best I can with the tools I have." These "tools" have made him "rich for a second time," he adds, explaining that making money is easy. Right now, he's more concerned with deciding where he wants to be. Doherty hopes to act and direct in the future, and plans to develop a variety-show concept for clubs and theaters that combines magic, vaudeville and comedy.

Life for Doherty is not about good or bad, but about character and passion, his tools for living. "The world apologizes for passion. I have no fear of death, only the fear of being alive and not living. I'm getting younger, not older, and I'm having a ball because I now know it's OK to be me."

Body of Knowledge

A guide to the actions and expressions that speak louder than words

The meaning of some gestures are obvious: you pass a car on the right at 80 mph, swerve dangerously back into the left lane; the driver catches up with you and flips you his middle finger. Right away, you know what he's trying to say: "You're No. 1!" Likewise, the driver is completely attuned to your textbook body-language response, thanking him for the compliment (a nod of your head), and consoling him with your opinion that although he's not quite No. 1, you're pretty darn sure he's a close No. 2 (the extension of the middle fingers on both of your hands).

Not all motor-skill parlance is this self-explanatory, however. Some statements manifest themselves via subtle shifts of posture or physical intonation. Interpreting first-date nuances is one of the more opportune applications of body-language cues. Is your would-be cupid coyly aloof, earnestly disinterested or so sick of your spiel that he or she is ready to crack you in the head? Important distinctions to decipher.

Here's your body-to-English translator, a quick-reference guide, courtesy of doctor and author Doe Lang through Ladies Home Journal.

- Crossed arms has always been the omen for "keep away," but context is everything, according to Dr. Lang. If you're doing your opening-conversation, standup routine for someone who is vehemently jutting crossed arms and elbows at you, then perhaps he or she is on the defensive. On the other hand, if someone who seems detached from the scene has his or her arms crossed, there's a good chance that he or she is merely apprehensive about jumping into a conversation. That's your cue to saunter toward the bar and break the ice with one of your stellar opening lines.
- Licking lips, fidgeting, averting eyes all indicate nervousness with the situation at hand. If you are the situation at hand, don't fret—once again, context is everything, according to Dr. Lang, who gets paid big bucks to keep repeating the same answer. Unless you're interrogating your jittery counterpart, his or her nervousness could be founded in the pressure of trying make a good first impression. Licking lips can indicate a wishful anticipation of a kiss.
- Jutting the chin out, trying to stand taller, taking deep breaths all indicate that he or she is probably not interested. In fact, the chin's jutting out says "Not only am I not interested, but you're making me awfully defensive, which could lead to some serious bodily harm for you.'

One should also be attuned to one's own body language. Here are some cues to common monologues.

- Hunched shoulders indicate fear, discouragement or a heavy burden, often in the form of actual bricks stacked on your shoulders ("That explains it!").
- Biting your nails, biting your lip, or gnawing on yourself in general is a sure sign of self-reproach—this is an angry action, a lashing back at your perception of frequent criticism. Stop doing it; it's not fair to you. Biting someone else is fair to you.
- Fake smiles, aside from being one of the most annoying, patronizing expressions, are relatively simple to spot: a smile etched for an awkwardly long time or a smile that doesn't involve the muscles around the eyes, is fake. And annoying and patronizing.

With a decent understanding of body language, recognizing a lie is easy. One way to tell if someone is fibbing is to smack him or her around until his or her body opens his or her mouth and says "I'm lying! I'm lying! Stop smacking me around!" This can be fun (until you're arrested) and is a lot more effective than saying "Look me in the eye and say that," because, according to a University of Virginia study cited in Young and Modern (Was I reading Young and Modern?), liars are just as likely to give you eye contact as someone who is telling the truth. The only sure-fire method is to sneak a peak at his or her pupils: research shows that whenever a person lies, his or her pupils dilate. ❑

Iceland is surrounded by endless miles of seething ocean. It is pummeled by Arctic winds and perilous storms. Its latitude and longitude converge in as desolate a place as any on the planet. And while no one can say for certain what could have possessed the Vikings to come to this place we call Iceland over a hundred centuries ago, we do know what they found once they got here.

The Vikings braved 50-foot seas, gale winds and sea monsters to discover our water. Surely you can manage a trip to the corner market.

A valley. A mountain. And a spring surging up from a place deep beneath the surface of the earth. Forcing its way upward, through ice, solidified layers of lava, and rock. Until, finally, it burst through into the sunlight. A water of such improbable purity, there are those among us who, even now, fervently believe that it surely must have sprung up from the very gods themselves.

The same Icelandic spring of life that continues to flow as clean and clear now as it has since the Ice Age. Indeed, from the very beginning of time itself. Thousands upon thousands of miles from anywhere. Untainted. Untouched. Unspoiled by civilization.

We call it Akva. A spring water unlike any other on earth. And if we seem a bit confident in this, rest assured it is not without good reason.

No other spring water, after all, comes from a place so completely and utterly removed from the compromising influences of civilization. To put it mildly, Iceland is as far off the beaten path as any place on earth.

As a result, our Akva spring water is remarkably soft. Clear. Without so much as a trace of sodium or other impurities. We hope you will try Akva.

You will find that it's available now on the shelves of your favorite corner market or delicatessen.

We know the Vikings had an almost insatiable thirst for adventure. Perhaps now we know how they quenched it.

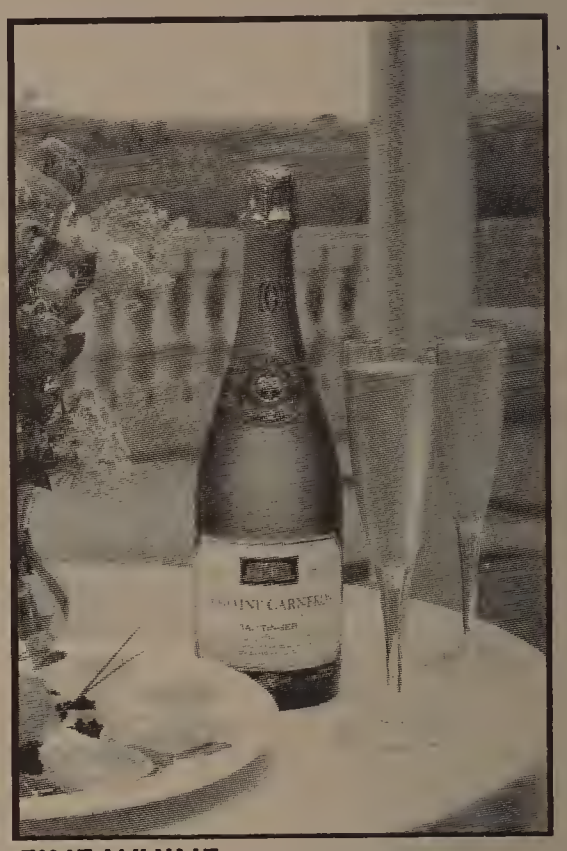
ALL THAT SPARKLES



"Americans associate the name 'Champagne' with either cheap, sugary, anonymous fizz or flashy displays of excesss; in either case, we are far from anything the public considers fine wine."

As a nation, America has long consumed such legendary quantities of carbonated soft drinks that one might logically expect the fine-wine drinkers among us to show a marked preference for the bubbly. Instead, sparkling wine as a category is vastly neglected and misunderstood here. Although many of our European cousins regularly enjoy sparklers with food, we avoid them except on "special occasions" where more attention seems focused on the loud pop than on the subtleties of aroma and flavor.

The wines have an image problem stemming partly from widespread confusion over what is and what is not champagne. First and foremost, the name denotes a geographic region in the cool northeast of France where chardonnay and two red grapes, Pinot Noir and Pinot Meunier, struggle each season barely to ripen. The term also describes the rigorous , time-consuming and costly process employed to introduce bubbles in a wine by inducing a second fermentation inside the bottle. This method originated in the Champagne district but is now adhered to by virtually all of the world's best sparkling-wine producers. The word "Champagne" should therefore indicate that a wine was made by a time-honored practice in the Champagne region where the grapes compromising it were grown. Many domestic companies, however, "borrow" the prestigious name and, to the consternation of the French, use it as a generic term to label wines they make by the much-inferior bulk process called the Charmat method. These "Champagnes" appear on a retail shelves for as little as 3 or 4 dollars.

The genuine article is expensive for a variety of reasons , including the cost of growing grapes so far north, the labor-ntensive production requirements, and the amount of time (four years on average) even the most basic non-vintage blends must age before public release. Outside of holiday-season-selling promotions, a top Champagne rarely sells for less that $20 — $25 to $30 is the usual range. The greatest Champagnes, produced in the finest vintages from vineyard-selected grapes and then aged for six years or longer, can cost three times this amount. Wonderful as these can be, they are often treated as status symbols and consumed uncritically, without regard for the very qualities that justify their expense . People learn to associate the name "Champagne" with either cheap, sugary, anonymous fizz or flashy displays of excesss; in either case, we are far from anything the public considers "fine wine."

Heavy taxation on sparkling wines places another roadblock to wider appreciation. Since lawmakers regard any wine with bubbles as a luxury item, the rate imposed is three times higher that that of table wines. The tax is a flat regressive levy on gallonage, so — especially in the case of the least expensive sparklers— it contributes more to the final cost than the liquid in the bottle.

FINE WHINE: Our European cousins drink Champagne with lunch, whereas we avoid them except for special occasions. Why?

Despite these limitations, the wide diversity of sparkling wines currently available and the versatility of styles and flavors they represent offer open-minded consumers a wonderful opportunity. Because it is easy to overlook, the most important thing to remember in evaluating sparklers is that the bubbles are only one component. The best are smooth and creamy in texture, with persistent streams of pinpoint bubbles. The worst taste coarse and aggressive with harsh, rasping flavors.

The quality of any sparkler is only as good as that of the "base wine" that produces it and contributes most to its character. Depending on the grape varieties and where and how they are grown, fine sparkling wines can range from light, floral, elegant, and crop in nature (German Riesling Sekt) to rich, smoky and vaguely berry-like (Californian or Australian Bland de Noir). Those that age the longest generally show the most subtlety and finesse, with aromas of grilled bread and vanilla, with a pure lingering finish. As with all wine, the proper balance of fruit flavor and acidity is crucial. And there is one final requirement:: whatever their other traits, sparklers should, above all, be refreshing. In other words, Champagne is exactly the type of wine to serve with so much of today's food. ❑

A novel look at cucina Italiana

La Buona Cucina

Our friend and colleague Lotte Mendolsohn has recently written a wonderful new cookbook, Italian Regional Cookery: A Culinary Travelogue. When Lotte moved to the Boston area after many years in Mexico, she met Bea Lazzaro whose years of experience and love of buona cucina led to a collaborative effort on Italian cooking. Many of the recipes come from Bea's professional experience in the kitchen, as well as those learned from her mother and grandmother.

The book starts with a discussion of the courses of the Italian table and continues with a practical section on how to stock a proper Italian pantry and how to make pasta. The remaining chapters tour all the regions of Italy, offering history and recipes along with a listing of the wine and cheeses native to each region. Interviews (chiacchierate) are placed throughout the book and provide interesting insight into the lives of many Italian-American immigrants who came to New England. The book is available at local bookstores.

Boston Brew

Boston Beer Company is celebrating the renovation and expansion of its brewery on Germania Street in Jamaica Plain with an Octoberfest celebration on Saturday, September 18. The site will be rededicated as the Boston Beer Museum with a ribbon-cutting ceremony at noon, immediately followed by a party that lasts until 5p.m. that will benefit the Spinazzolla Foundation. Admission to the event is $5.

Food from local restaurants and live music will be offered as well as clowns and face-painters for the kids. Visitors will also have the opportunity to dunk brewer Jim Koch into a tank of Samuel Adams. Free transportation to and from the brewery is available with shuttles picking up and dropping off at Faneuil Hall Marketplace, Bull and Finch Pub, Whiskey's restaurant, and the Coolidge Corner Clubhouse. For more information or directions call the brewery at 522-6661.

Also brewing is an autumn brewery dinner Wednesday, September 15, at John Harvard's Brew House in Cambridge. The dinner features hors d'oeuvres and a four-course meal; each course is accompanied by a lager or ale. The price is $25 per person, including gratuities. Call 868-3585 for reservations.

Table talk, Italian-style

Maurizio and Linda Loddo recently opened Maurizio's Ristorante Italiano at 364 Hanover Street in the North End. The restaurant's bone-white walls and colorful abstract paintings exude a more sophisticated New York atmosphere than the average Italian eatery. Icarus will present, Tastes of Tuscany, a gala five-course wine dinner that will salute Tuscan wines. The dinner will be held Tuesday, September 21, and is $55 per person. Across the river in Cambridge, Jodi Adams is introducing a new dinner menu at Michela's that features the flavors of Naples and the Campania region of Italy. And finally, the owner of one of our favorite Italian restaurants, Trattoria Il Panino, will soon open a new establishment, Ristorante Il Panino at 295 Franklin Street near the Financial District. The five-story building will house a casual restaurant, serving bistro fare and brick-oven pizza, a fine-dining Italian restaurant, and a two-level nightclub with a dance floor. This will be the hottest opening since Armani Express came to Newbury Street.

The Greenhouse Effect

What does one do with the pots of rosemary, thyme and other culinary herbs now that winter is on the way? Don't send your plants into the snow because an interesting new product, Gro-Window, provides them a home throughout the year. Gro-Window creates a small greenhouse out of a storm window, is easy to install and costs around $130. It is available from Green Bay-New England Garden Products, 247-6282, and from F. Diehl & Sons, 235-1530.

Fine wine and dine

For the serious wine lover, the Leukemia Society of America hosts a benefit aboard the cruise ship Odyssey on Sunday, September 19. A four-course dinner cruise is on the itinerary, along with wine tastings led by Burton Anderson, author of The Wine Atlas of Italy, and Josh Wesson, co-author of Red Wine With Fish. John Boyajian of Boyajian Caviar will also host a caviar tasting accompanied by Veuve Clicquot champagne. Olives will supply the food. The cruise will be followed by a fine-wine auction (how about a '55 Latour?) in the Wharf Room of the Boston Harbor Hotel. Tickets range up to $175 per person, depending upon which tastings are attended. Call (800) 688-6572 for reservations. ❑

Dining Review / Ed and Ruth Feldman

Colombian Comfort Food

Homey and authentic, eat at Deleitese and feel like you're at casa

Yes, there is a reason to venture over to East Boston other than catching the next commuter flight from Logan. Deleitese Restaurante is a new storefront, mom-and-pop operation serving some of the best authentic comidas Colombianas. Deleitese was recommended by a homesick Colombian and was everything he promised: not fancy but very good traditional Colombian fare.

Since we stopped by for lunch early in the week, not all of the selections were available. Nevertheless, we enjoyed a hearty sampling of their specialties. We began with empanadas de carne ($1.00) a sizable, fried, hand-formed creation filled with potatoes, beef and vegetables. This was served with a crock of tasty salsa verde, which we used on other dishes as well. The arepa con quesito ($2.70), a thick, handmade corn tortilla served with a pat of sweet butter and a chunk of (farmer-like) cheese, was delicious and almost could have been a satisfying dessert.

The plastic-looking photos of the entrees on the menu did not do justice to what was ahead. The plato típico ($9.00) is a generous array of well-seasoned pink beans, a rice timbale topped with a fried egg, fried plantain and a thick slab of bacon cooked to a nicely rendered crispness. An accompanying wooden board was brimming with marinated grilled beef, salad, avocado and a cornmeal type of biscuit. Everything was seasoned delicately and cooked to perfection—a massive amount of Colombian comfort food.

A second entree, the tamale ($5.00), was ordered as a true barometer of quality South American food. After a short wait, a massive tamale was delivered, freshly made, steaming and wrapped in a banana leaf. The consistency of the masa dough is delightfully light and yet hearty enough to hold its shape and surround all of the filling, which consisted of mixed vegetables, potato, cassava and a braised pork rib.

To help wash it all down, we enjoyed Columbiana, a carbonated beverage which reminded us of the no-longer-available Fanta Red Cream soda. Other beverages available are a variety of local and exotic fruit juices and shakes.

This relatively new storefront restaurant seats only 20, but with its framed travel posters and paraphernalia from Colombia, in addition to the gentle ethnic music in the background, Deleitese is sure to be packed often. The atmosphere is homey and authentic, so be prepared for a worthy cultural immersion.

Travel tip: Exit the Blue line at Maverick Station and walk 4 blocks. Deleitese is on the right side of the rotary (Central Square). If traveling by car, exit the tunnel and take the local-street exit. ❑

About Last Night. . . Lauren Dare AKA The Last Call Lady

A Hair-Raising Experience at Perry's

"...I had to turn down the best offer I'd had that night, because how the hell was I going to get home from Quincy the next morning?.."

The bigger the hair, the closer to God. If this is true, then Perry's is surely filled with saints, because baby, there is some big ol' hair to be found at this Faneuil Hall bar/club/meat rack. And you thought that big hair went out with Debbie Gibson's last concert. Shame on you! If you have a yearning to see reminders that the '80s created a middle-class fashion statement that brought us such treasures as acid-washed jeans, fringe, and lace-trimmed bobby socks worn with high heels, head over to Perry's. Please. Every bar has its own character, its own type of clientele, its own, shall we say, milieu. Perry's seems to have carefully culled its patrons from south suburban Boston (as someone once referred to it, the "Irish Riviera." Oh, dear me, how un-politically correct!).

IF YOU GO

Perry's Saloon

199 State Street
367-1297
Last Call: 2:00 a.m.

Saturday night. There's a line out the door. Monosyllabic, no-necked bouncers are checking IDs (why bother, pray tell, when half the people they let in here are obviously just emerging from the ravages of puberty?), a fight is brewing on the street outside (there's always a fight brewing outside), and last-minute applications of hair spray are destroying yet another piece of the ozone layer.

Once inside, the upstairs bar beckons, mostly because it's right in front of you. It's a good idea to load up at the upstairs bar where you at least have a fighting chance of attracting the bartender's attention, and you can still remember why you thought coming here might be amusing. After a few bevies, you should be primed to head downstairs into the pit, uh, excuse me, the dance floor. It's a jungle down there, and only the strong survive. The music is right off of WJMN 94.5's top-10 play list, and groups of girls are dancing in circles around piles of pocketbooks on the floor while guys with Southie haircuts and baggy pants cruise by, offering tempting pick-up lines. In the dark corners off the dance floor, couples are locked together like Chinese puzzles, and if you look closely, I think you can see "This space for rent" signs on anybody who is not specifically attached to someone yet. If you can't get laid at Perry's, then you should simply move to Antarctica and explore the joys of oneness. This is not to say that you necessarily will want to get lucky here, but, should you have the inclination, the opportunity is sure to present itself.

Someone is almost always dramatically ill in the vicinity of the bathrooms—whether from the copious alcohol intake Perry's seems to provoke or from the aerosol fumes, it's difficult to tell for sure. While I was in the Ladies' Room, I tried to bribe someone into giving me a lesson on how to make my hair achieve that gravity-defying height, but I just couldn't get the hang of it. I felt so left out with my hair clinging so persistently to my skull, that I almost wanted to leave, but with my usual fortitude, I ordered another shot of Jaegermeister and toughed it out.

Seemingly in the blink of an eye, somewhere between my second and fourth shots, the lights started coming on. I had to turn down the best offer I'd had that night, because how the hell was I going to get home from Quincy the next morning, and settle for one of the Italian sausages thoughtfully provided outside for everyone whose taste buds have been heavily sedated. I need a little recovery space before I head back to Perry's, but at least it will give me time to practice on my hair. ❑

Beacon Hill Pub
49 Charles St., Bos, A "scene straight out of Star Wars" reads the Worst of Boston award hanging on the wall. Anything goes at this popular Beacon Hill dive bar. Inside you'll find upscale Beacon Hill professionals mixing freely with members of skid row (not the band, mind you). The crowd is friendly and unpretentious. Thur.-Sat. college students abound. No cover. Free wings and dogs 4-7 p.m. weekdays.

Cactus Club
236-0200, 939 Boylston St., Bos, Get sautéed, jelloed and bit with their firewater menu, including Aztec Tea (dark rum, lemonade and cranberry juice), Coyote Killer (light and dark rum, peach schnapps, ginger beer and mixed juices), or a Boa Constrictor (Malibu rum, white rum, banana liquor and fruit juice). Of course, you could always have a tangerine, raspberry, mango, strawberry or traditional margarita, and the daring can go for a dip in the Cactus Bowl. Full menu available at bar.

The Littlest Bar
523-9766, 47 Province St., Bos, Located near Downtown Crossing. A quick walk from the Orpheum Theatre. 10 customers, the two regulars who sit in the corner and sip their stouts, the bartender and cocktail waitress make up a full house in this charming little watering hole. Guinness and Rolling Rock are among the beers served on tap. Edibles also served. Hours are from 8:30 a.m.-12 a.m. Weekdays and Saturdays.

Market Place Cafe
227-9660, 300 Faneuil Hall Mkt., Bos, In a comfortable, relaxed area in Faneuil Hall, sit back and listen to the great sounds of the Brian Walkley Band with special guest Bruce Bartlett every Thursday at 8:30 p.m. Live music nightly during outdoor cafe season. Casual atmosphere and dress.

RARE-ING TO GO

"...It's not surprising that Swinging Steaks would end up promoting its national debut in an odd way: by flat-bed truck..."

Swinging Steaks is an odd-enough name that many record labels balked at signing the Boston group by that moniker. "If everybody says, 'You got to change it,' nothing makes you hang onto it harder that that," observes bassist-singer Paul Kochanski.

So perhaps it's not surprising that Swinging Steaks would end up promoting its national debut in an odd way: by flat-bed truck.

In five days surrounding the Sept. 14 release of Southside of the Sky (Capricorn), the group will play 11 shows, most from atop a parked truck.

"I don't know where the idea originated, but it was something we had definitely thought about for years," Kochanski says, "the idea of going around on a guerrilla tour, on the back of a flatbed truck, just setting up and playing."

"This isn't quite so guerrilla," he admits. "It's more structured and organized — and legal, actually."

Among stops on the Swinging Steaks tour will be the U-Mass/Boston campus at noon today, the Hard Rock Cafe (indoors) at 9 p.m. tonight, Boston University's George Sherman Union at noon tomorrow, HMV Superstore in Harvard Square at noon Friday and Strawberries Records in Kenmore Square Saturday, at a time still to be announced.

"In Boston, I think more people have heard of us than have actually heard us," Kochanski says. "It's kind of a way to introduce ourselves to people at little or no risk."

There is little risk that people will not like the Steaks' smooth, rootsy sound, which has pleased fans of both rock and country.

"We're perceived around here as a country band, but we're not really a country band," says the bassist, who co-founded the Steaks with singer-guitarist Jamie Walker." It became real obvious when we went over the Mason-Dixon line."

That's where Swinging Steaks went for a record deal, signing with the Nashville-based Capricorn, which has been reborn with a diverse roster — after long carrying a Southern-rock reputation from being the '70s label of the Allman Brothers and Marshall Tucker Bands.

The Steaks' album was produced by Gary Katz, known for his work with Steely Dan. "You can't say there's really a Gary Katz sound," Kochanski contends. "It's just the sound of a band playing. That's what we went for."

Katz helped mix the Steaks' 1992 independent CD "Suicide at the Wishing Well" as part of a used-sound-equipment swap with a friend of the band. He was so taken with the Steaks that he signed them to a production deal and helped the group land its record deal.

Now things look brighter for the Steaks than they did for the Drive, an early '80s group fronted by Walker and Kochanski, which, oddly enough, played mainstream pop. In 1989, the two began playing acoustically with guitarist Tim Giovanniello and keyboardist Jim Gambino, before drummer Joe Donnelly (Del Fuegos) solidified the Steaks line-up.

"It was just 'Let's do this and have fun. We're not making any money anyway,'" Kochanski says.

That could change with the widespread release of songs like "Beg, Steal or Borrow" and ballad "Circlin,'" a previous WBOS hit aimed at AAA, which stands for adult alternative airplay. Then again, you could settle for a roadside assist from the flat-bed Steaks.

Elsewhere: In addition to Rod Stewart's Great Woods dates Sept. 18-19, consider the again-odd but great pairing of smooth Marc Cohn and feisty Melissa Ferrick at the Paradise Sept. 18. ❑

BOYS, BOMBS AND BITONALITY

An introduction to composer Benjamin Britten (part II)

Our modern notions of political correctness contort and topple when faced with a figure like Benjamin Britten, one of our century's greatest composers of choral and operatic music. While it's easy to applaud the late Britten for his outspoken commitment to pacifism and plurality, his penchant for young boys leaves, as it were, a bad taste in the mouth. We find ourselves at a loss. He was a paradoxical figure, called both "child-like" and "Satanic"; but several recent explorations on disc and in print somewhat clear the ambiguities.

Humphrey Carpenter's new biography of Britten (Charles Scribner's Sons, $30, 677 pp. with photographs) sketches the lineaments of Britten's life in lucid detail: his early rise to fame, his pacifistic self-exile in America during the Second World War, his lifelong romance with principal-tenor Peter Pears, and, finally, his quite Olympian creation of the Aldeburgh Festival.

While Carpenter's biography marvelously details every aspect of Britten's life, public and private, the author obviously believes that Britten's sexuality lies at the root of much of his music. This, needless to say, makes for very lively reading. Carpenter regards Britten's music as a struggle between poles of innocence and corruption. His analysis stresses these biographical connections at the expense of purely musical considerations.

The musical analysis may be idiosyncratic, but the biographical information is invariably absorbing and informative. Carpenter's treatment of Britten's homosexuality is frank but never grimy—he works largely through innuendo when dealing with the boys (as Britten seems to have done himself). And there are any number of delightful cameos: Britten, Auden, Pears and Thomas Mann's son, Golo, dancing up and down curtains and hot-water pipes in their Brooklyn apartment; Britten spending Christmas Day playing "Happy Families" with Shostakovich; and Britten scribbling for Rostropovich a brief cantata for tenor, soprano and cow. On the whole, a delightful biography in the modern psychoanalytical vein—it makes one want to hear to the music.

The obvious recommendation for those interested in sampling Britten's pacifistic works would be Richard Hickox's cinematic recording of the War Requiem , paired with the orchestral Sinfonia da Requiem and the Ballad of Heroes (released last year, Chandos 8983/4). These pieces portray war, not simply as a waste of life, but as a grotesque absurdity. The sardonic battle scene scherzo in the Sinfonia, for example, ends not with a clean classical flourish, but with a series of repulsive gasps and convulsions that only later are transformed into something noble.

Most of Britten's pacifist works have this gritty, fragmented feel to them. London Records, which offers many of the composer's recordings, has just released Owen Wingrave (London 433 200-2), a gripping adaptation of a Henry James ghost story in which a militant young pacifist defies his family and flees an army career. He is subsequently done in by the baleful family specter. As in the celebrated War Requiem, the message is grim: Aggressive drives may be repellent, but they're inextricably bound with human nature, and so can only be expunged in death.

Britten felt similarly uneasy about his sexual drives. His first substantial opera, Peter Grimes, depicts an unstable fisherman accused of murdering his boy-apprentices. Once again, the central character, dolefully conscious of his own aggression and perversion, opts for a release in death. Bernard Haitink's recording, just released (EMI 7 54832-2), adequately conveys that bleak-and-hounded sense of despair; but Britten's own recording, with Peter Pears in the title role, catches the flux of innocence and brutality more keenly.

Britten's characters, innocent and appalled in the face of their own brutal yearnings, may have sought escape; the composer himself, however, faced his drives through his music. His greatest works have a heroic frankness, exploring themes still vitally relevant: prejudice, ostracism and peace. The apparent contradictions in Britten's character shouldn't frighten us away. On the contrary, they're what make his work so valuable. ❑

Kelly, 28, Brookline
"Suzy's Swinging Seventies party because everybody was Kung Fu Fighting."

Lisa, 26, Brookline
"A semi-formal Christmas party where everybody had to bring handmade ornaments."

HUNTINGTON THEATRE CO.
264 Huntington Ave., Boston
Learn about the extraordinary experiences of an African-American woman growing up in the deep South in the HTC's production of From the Mississippi Delta. Performances run through Oct. 10; call 266-0800.

MEDIEVAL MANOR
246 E. Berkeley St., Boston
Combining the bawdy tradition of burlesque vaudeville with aspects of Dark Ages dining, this satirical musical transports its audience back to a comedic castle cabaret. There is no silverware for the six-course meal, customers have to raise their hands to leave the room, and everyone must pay homage to the king. Call 423-4900.

MYSTERY CAFE
290 Congress St., Boston
To celebrate its fifth year, the Mystery Cafe presents Murder at Rick's Cafe and Let's Kill the Boss. Tickets, which include a four-course dinner plus the show are $29-$33 and are available at Bostix or by phone at 262-1826.

NEW THEATRE
1st & 2nd Church Theatre, 66 Marlborough St., Boston
New Theatre presents Seven Day Wonder from Sept. 23 to Oct. 17, a play that asks, "What If Faust had only the best of intentions?" In it, the main character is an ambitious missionary who sells his soul to the devil in order to save the world. Call 247-7388. Tickets are $12 & $15.

NEW REPERTORY THEATRE
54 Lincoln St., Newton Highlands
Tickets are now on sale for the New Rep's '93-'94 season, which begins with a production of Jar the Floor from Sept. 16-Oct. 24. The show is a tender, funny story of four generations of women in an African-American family preparing for the great-grandmother's 90th birthday. Call 332-1646.

NORA THEATRE CO.
The Theatre, Harvard Square, Cambridge
Through Oct. 2, the NTC performs Spoils of War, a story set in post-WWII New York, detailing the efforts of a 16-year-old boy's efforts to reunite his parents after a 10-year separation. Call 495-4530 for times and ticket prices.

NORTH SHORE MUSIC THEATRE
62 Dunham Rd., Beverly
Until Sept. 18, the NSMT presents the classic musical Brigadoon, a love story about a magical town that emerges from the mists of Scotland just one day each century. Call (508) 922-8500.

RIVERSIDE THEATRE WORKS
French's Opera House
45 Fairmount Ave., Hyde Park
The RTW presents Guys and Dolls, the musical about gangsters, gambling, long engagements, and innocent missionaries. Through Oct. 30 at 8 p.m.; cocktail hour begins at 7 p.m. Tickets are $12 for adults, $10 for seniors and $8 for students. Call 361-7024.

TERRACE ROOM
Park Plaza Hotel, Boston
Forever Plaid, a musical hit about a group's second chance at stardom, is continuing its stint at the Park Plaza Hotel's Terrace Room. Legal Seafood dinner/show packages are $52 and $49. For times, prices and reservations, call 357-8384.

THEATRE LOBBY
216 Hanover St., Boston
Those zany nuns from Nunsense have taken up residence at the Theatre Lobby in Boston's North End. Special restaurant/theater packages are available with the European Restaurant. For more information on dinner packages, call 227-9872. For times and prices, call Ticketmaster at (800) 382-8080.

THEATER OFFENSIVE
Boston Center for the Arts, 539 Tremont St., Boston
TO presents "OUT on the Edge: The 2nd Annual Festival of Lesbian and Gay Theater." The group performs about six different shows between Sept. 16 and Oct. 3. Call 542-4214 for titles, times, dates and ticket prices.

UNDERGROUND RAILWAY THEATER
Boston Center for the Arts
539 Tremont St., Boston
The URT examines both the humorous and serious sides of the 50-something crowd in Washed-Up Middle-Aged Women. In the Black Box Theater Sept. 16-18 and 23-25 at 8 p.m. Call 426-ARTS.

WANG CENTER
270 Tremont St., Boston
Of course, the hottest ticket in the theater district this fall will be for Miss Saigon, the tragic love story of an American soldier and the Vietnamese woman he left in Saigon. The show is a must-see, but it's only here until Oct. 9. Call 931-2222.

LECTURES/READINGS

ST. ELIZABETH'S HOSPITAL
736 Cambridge St., Brighton
Stop smoking! For only $65, you can enroll in an eight-session course that gradually weans smokers off cigarettes. It's a weekly class, beginning Sept. 27, that runs from 7-8:30 p.m. Call 789-2430.

WORDSWORTH BOOKS
Brattle Theatre, Harvard Square, Cambridge
Pulitzer Prize-winning author Tracy Kidder speaks about his newest book, Old Friends, Sept. 21 at 5:30 p.m. The book chronicles the tales of several residents of a nursing home in Northampton, Mass. Admission is free, but tickets must be picked up at either Wordsworth or the Brattle box office. Bring canned goods for the Food Pantry, if you can. Call 354-5201.

GALLERIES

GALLERY NAGA
67 Newbury St., Boston
NAGA presents New Paintings of Boston by Ed Stitt, a young realist painter whose depictions of Boston buildings, both famous and mundane, would make you swear they were photographs. Also on view are works by Elizabeth Rosenblum on the theme Pathologizing Desire. Through Oct. 2.

SCULPTURE WALK '93
Larz Anderson Park
15 Newton St., Brookline
The works of 29 sculptors complement the beauty of this recently renovated park through Nov. 8. Free catalogues and maps of the outdoor sculpture exhibition are available at the Museum of Transportation on the grounds. For directions, call 522-6140.

SPECIAL EVENTS

AIDS ACTION COMMITTEE
Copley Square, Boston
Find what you've been looking for at the AAC's first annual Attic Sale and Artisan Fair on Sept. 19 from 12-6 p.m. The event will be a combination of flea market-type bargains on jewelry, appliances, CDs, books, etc., as well as a showcase for some of Boston's finest artisans.

AIWF
Sakonnet Vineyards, Little Compton, RI
Julia Child and the Boston chapter of the American Institute of Wine and Food invite you to "The Last Great Barbecue of Summer" Sept. 19 between 1-5 p.m. The $70 ticket allows you to eat a wide variety of grilled food, award-winning wine from Sakonnet, a tour of the winery, live music and beer by Sam Adams. Call 427-0538.

ASID
Various locations
This is for all those wanna-be peeping Toms out there. Come tour seven stunning homes of well-known and nationally published interior designers in Wellesley, Weston, and Newton. Sponsored by the American Society of Interior Designers; call (508) 897-3784 for tickets or more details.

BOSTON GARDEN
Causeway St., Boston
You don't have to brave the crowds at Buckingham Palace to see the changing of the guard. Come see the Royal Regiments Sept. 22 at 8 p.m. in all of their English, Welsh and Scottish splendour (yes, with a "u" - they are British, you know). Call the Garden box office or 931-3100 for tickets.

CHOWDAFEST
Charlestown Navy Yard
All chowdaheads will be thrilled to attend the Chowdafest Sept. 19, 12-6 p.m. All proceeds benefit Horizons for Youth, which provides environmental education and camping for kids in need. The event will be held rain or shine; $6 for adults and $3 for kids and seniors. Live music. Call 828-7550.

LEUKEMIA SOCIETY
The Odyssey, Rowes Wharf
The Massachusetts chapter of the Leukemia Society hosts The Odyssey and the Ecstasy: A Fine and Rare Wine Auction, Tasting and Dinner Cruise Sept. 19 from 4-8 p.m. aboard the Odyssey luxury yacht. Tickets run $80-$175, and all go to benefit the society. Call 329-9944 for more information.

THE OTHER SIDE
World Trade Center
Northern Ave., Boston
Check out The Other Side: A Virtual Reality Arena at the World Trade Center. Tickets are $7; some rides and attractions are extra. The event is the largest gathering of virtual reality entrepreneurs this summer. Call 1-800-367-9822 or 439-5000.

SYJP
Avenue C
25 Boylston Place, Boston
It's New Year's in September for Boston's Jewish community, and the Society of Young Jewish Professionals is having a party Sept. 19 at 8 p.m. Jewish singles, ages 22-39, are invited. Tickets are $12, $15 at the door. Call 376-3939. Proper dress and ID, please.

CLASSICAL

LONGY SCHOOL OF MUSIC
Edward Pickman Concert Hall
27 Garden St., Cambridge
Longy also sponsors classical music concerts virtually every night, and most are either free or cost only $5. Call 876-0956 for that day's program.

FILMS

BOSTON FILM FESTIVAL
Loews Copley Place
Copley Square, Boston
The Ninth Annual Boston Film Festival runs through Sept. 23. Call 333-FILM for a daily program.

BRATTLE THEATER
40 Brattle St., Cambridge
The Brattle Theater presents a variety of film series— from classic to cult. Through Nov. 11, Mondays are "Garbo Acts!"; Tuesdays are "French Noir: Policiers"; Wednesdays are "The Films of John Woo"; Thursdays are "Kurosawa and Mifune"; and weekends are special engagements. Themes change every two months. For a full program, call 876-6837.

COOLIDGE CORNER
290 Harvard St., Brookline
Accessible by the Green "C" MBTA line (Coolidge Corner stop), this independent first-run moviehouse with renowned art deco features boasts two screens, including the second-largest silver screen in Boston. The Coolidge specializes in presenting the works of independent, creative filmmakers from all over the world. Delightfully air-conditioned. Call 734-2500 for a program.

LASERIUM
At the Museum of Science, Science Park, Boston
In the tradition of Lollapalooza, the annual alternative rock concert extravaganza, the museum presents the Lollapalaser show every Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m. The show is a combination of lasers and music from groups such as Living Colour, Jane's Addiction, and the Red Hot Chili Peppers. Other days have different musical themes; for information, call 723-2500.

MIT.
Corner of Massachusetts Ave. and Memorial Drive, Cambridge
MIT hosts Japanese film night Sept. 17 in room 1-390. At 7 p.m., see Tampopo, the first Japanese noodle western; at 9 p.m., it's Rashomon, a 1950 classic set in 12th-century Kyoto; finally, at 10:30 p.m., see Street of Shame, a 1956 film of sensitive vignettes of the women who work in a brothel called "Dreamland." All are subtitled; call 253-2839 for details.

MUSEUM OF SCIENCE
Mugar Omni Theatre, Science Park, Boston
New to the world of Omnimax is Grand Canyon: The Hidden Secrets, which runs through October. For the more tropically oriented, Omni treats you to Tropical Rainforest, a film that traces the evolution, and destruction, of one of nature's most important creations. Call 723-2500; purchasing tickets 24 hours in advance is advised.

BY ROCKIE GARDINER — SEPTEMBER 1 – SEPTEMBER 14, 1993

GENERAL FORECAST (If you know your ascendant, read it too.)

Hope springs eternal – another NFL season, another zillion reasons to believe your/my team will triumph. While Mercury trines the unpredictable Uranus-Neptune conjunction this weekend, all manner of miracles are possible, all explanations seem plausible. But the news is probably just a setup for the slam-bam, headbanger of a Mars-Jupiter conjunction on Sunday, a whoop-de-do war cry to accompany truly dangerous enthusiasms. It's also a precursor of the militant Mars square to the weird Uranus-Neptuna combo on the 9th. Perhaps we'll see more (smart) bombs bursting in air, more divisiveness among separatist factions all over the planet, maybe we'll get a signal from the Mars Observer lost (Neptune) in space (Uranus). Whila these are among the most challenging, erratic and otherworldly aspects we've been hit with in a while, enduring them with a modicum of grace can result in substantial rewards. Next Friday the Virgo sun trinas that troublesome Capricorn duo so we may actually see some progress, perhaps a resolution that'll last longer than a minute. Labor Day itself should be fairly quiet, a well-deserved raspite from the slings, arrows and pipe bombs coming every which way. Enjoy.

ARIES (MARCH 20-APRIL 19)

You're aasily influenced by your mate's optimism, your public's enthusiasm or your lawyer's talent for tipping the scales of justice. Balance is the lesson of tha day. As your Mars ruler meets expansive, expensive Jupiter in Libra, the sign of significant relationships, you won't be able to restrain yourself by yourself. In fact, there's hardly a thing you can do solo except attack the fluctuating forces affecting current career choices. Don't go off half-cocked. Have a plan and a partner in crime.

TAURUS (APRIL 20-MAY 20)

Whila other signs may be awash in kookiness and confusion this week, the brave bull manages to succeed by saying what needs to be said and doing, sometime next Friday, what comes naturally. There might be trouble with co-workers and foreigners, but their antagonisms don't hava to become yours. Stay on a safe and sane track, create to tha best of your artistic abilities – thare'll be ample opportunity – and you'll be rewarded, if not financially, then by attaining a purely personal goal.

GEMINI (MAY 21-JUNE 20)

The usual tension, a seasonal event, that occurs when your Mercury ruler passes through picky Virgo can propel you out on the road, to the health food market or into the files in search of accurate, practical information. Trading in knowledge can also have financial benefits, particularly if you dig into insurance and investment matters. There are a few drawbacks: you're liable to push beyond normal limitations, bet more than you should or play around with reckless abandon. Watch it.

CANCER (JUNE 21-JULY 22)

The Pisces full moon, Tuesday's blue moon, is still weaving its magic spell, making you dreamy, ditzy and strangely susceptible to others' suggestions. Strong aspects to your erratic partnership scene can put you at the mercy of his or her whim. Mercifully, money matters go well, but what passes for domestic tranquillity at your house can disappear when macho Mars pushes buttons, shortens fuses and wields a knife next Thursday. Try to keep a sense of proportion, avoid megalomaniacs and their mammoth projects.

LEO (JULY 23-AUGUST 22)

Your neighborhood may be a hotbed of activity this weekend – part entertainment, part enterprise. One gung-ho cheerleader on the block or an overly optimistic sibling can further upset a shaky work and health scene, but even if you're pressed to undertake more than you really care to, do it. Next Friday, when your sun ruler benefits from those unstabla conditions, you'll profit financially from this week's excess. On a personal note – beautify the bod, reshape the lion's mane. Venus is in Leo, love is stalking you.

VIRGO (AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22)

This week could turn out to be the high point of the Virgo Experience, a multi-media event celebrating your creative talents and personable personality. Because your Mercury ruler is supported by the weird and wondrous, wild and wacky Uranus-Neptune conjunction, you find order in what others call chaos. And, of course, have a perfectly wonderful time doing so. On the other hand, money-making matters should be handled gingerly since the tendency is to leap way before you remember to look. Some can stomach the thrill, some virgins can't.

LIBRA (SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22)

How much motivation does it take? The incredible energy generated by the ambitious Mars-Jupiter conjunction in your sign can launch a rocket, an innovative project or a philosophical imperative. How much luckier can you get? Jupiter may be raising ethical standards to new heights, but courageous Mars provides the heart and balls to pursue and achieve your current goals. The folks at home may resent your pontificating, but if they've given you nothing but problems lately, stop trying to pacify them.

SCORPIO (OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21)

Most of tha machinations and motivations are hidden this weak, so unless you're working behind the scenes yourself, you might not realize just how much power is being exerted on your behalf. Next week, when old friends and siblings are more opan about their actions, you'll see how tha story of your current event unfolded. Maanwhile, tha gossip is juicy, the neighbors are freaky, but fascinating, and if you don't piss one of them off, you'll hava a fine tima this weekend. Just don't fly next Thursday.

SAGITTARIUS (NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21)

Informative, idealistic and irrational. The news from the top (boss, government, parent) can assuage a tricky financial scena just days before friends upset it. Don't laap at the first bait dangled before you this weekend. Valuas are fluctuating, money matters seem to be charting their own course, and all you can reasonably do is maintain your balance (holding on to the Libra/Librium in your life?) until next Friday. That's when tha career/cash payoff should come in. Please, no manic episode to mark the event.

CAPRICORN (DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20)

Another milestone of a week, with an exciting, borderline scary, career offer on one hand and an impressive intellectual reward on the other. Grab them both because this sort of opportunity comes around only once every 12 years. The ride will be ebullient and extravagant, but don't for a minute assume you can maintain control of the scane, much less yourself. The aspects to the planets in Capricorn are too erratic, too fantastic for the well-chosen word. Nonethelass, a far-out publishing/teaching project is a real possibility.

AQUARIUS (JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18)

Although the world sees your friendly, as opposed to fierce, facada most of the time, there are moments, like the ones that'll arise this week, when you can lose your cool in one frantic second. As first mercurial Mercury and then impulsive Mars aspect your Uranus ruler, any littla thing can throw you off stride. Remember this when you feal your blood boil for no apparent reason. And be careful with machinery, sharp objects and steely-eyed foraignars. What you don't know, who you'ra not familiar with, can hurt you.

PISCES (FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19)

Obsassion. Tha Calvin Klein days are here again. First you'll get tha message, words from a loved ona that'll put you on better terms with friends and colleagues. But when meddlesoma Mars squares your Neptuna ruler next Thursday, the madness sets in. Delusions about sex, powar and money should be kept to yoursalf, otherwise tha self-sama buddies could freak. On the plus sida, this planatary aspect invents an imaginative horror story lina, a fantastic opera, a romantic, ridiculous ad campaign.

Island Girl

The title of this memoir captures the pungent and poignant tone of Esmeralda Santiago's dislocation from home, the barrio in Puerto Rico, which she left for a radically different life in America. Santiago begins by remembering the sweetness of the guavas she ate on the island, the final one she savored on the airplane going to New York at the age of 13, and the hard guavas she now finds at the Shop & Save — a metaphor of lost and found. Much of the book is set in the tin-shack poverty of Puerto Rico, where her warring parents and 10 siblings lead a life of uproar, yes, but one full of earthy richness. Santiago writes of her mother: "Mami hummed softly, the yellow and orange flowers of her dress blending into the greenness; a miraculous garden with legs and arms and a melody." Lyricism imbues her description of birth, sickness, death, food, her sexual awakening and the vivid everyday color of life. As we know from the book jacket, Santiago ended up at Harvard, so the book has a two-toned flavor, combining the primitive abundance of her childhood, which she delivers in lush language, and the sophistication that has enabled her to write, a bit bittersweetly, about the girl she left behind.

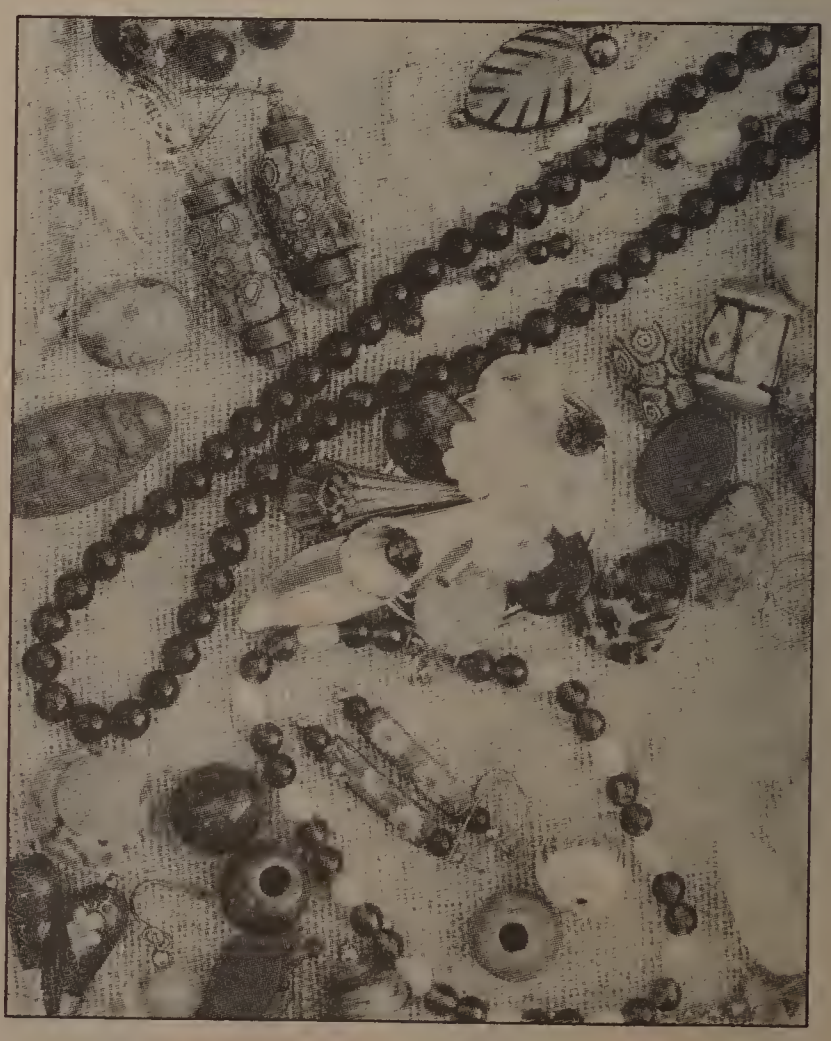
Get It Done (by Getting It Done for You)

Ah, the relief that comes from a task accomplished — by somebody else, that is, and oh, the sense of nurture that brings. In this case, it's Erruns Express that takes over, supplying the brawn, the brain, the time, the very search for that nibbled moment of time, the getting there, the waiting and the dealing that spells job completion. Erruns Express will wait at your house for the proverbial repairman, take in the car for the 7:30 a.m. tune-up, lug the computer to the fix-it place and return the sweater to Filene's. To relieve you of the boredom and the shame, this service will also stand in line at the Registry and pay your overdue tickets. Though not your children, Erruns will take your dog to the vet. Those sorts of things that involve lifting and carrying cost $15 per hour (with a one-hour minimum.)



Things that Erruns' Robin Levine calls "the overflow of paper craziness" — such as paying bills (which she then files so a client could ask her, say, for the amount paid to the cleaners last year), processing medical claims, and balancing checkbooks — these "brain" things cost $25 per hour and are usually done at your house, whether or not you're there. (Some clients have a standing biweekly arrangement for this.) So, in Erruns Express you've got an accountant, a secretary, a heavy-lifter, an efficiency expert and a tactful Mama. And yes, unlike your mother, they're bonded.

To Bead or Not to Bead

Back in business after a fire, Cambridge's Little Russia teems with merry folk exoticism and jewelry — some of it already made and some in pieces. The shop's colorful stock of loose beads brings forth the itch to make jewelry oneself. In the cabinets are necklaces of semiprecious stones, including thick bits of honey-colored amber and beads and stones cut in twisty shapes that are triangular, flat, faceted, and simply round; some even resemble Russian turrets (or, for that matter, Dairy Queens). The Newbury Street store offers jewelry-making classes, so you can wander around the store and transform that glory of beads painted blueberry-blue like lapis, these pristine glassy Venetian beads, and that mini-ocean of jade into necklaces of your own creation. There's an atmosphere here of Russian voices and accents that make the enterprise seem especially exciting. Also, the shop sells alluring markasite, a metal that sparkles with dark stones (like tiny diamonds born in gray rain). One watch in stock features two panthers leaping across the wrist. Little Russia also specializes in stacking dolls and brightly lacquered, fully usable, red-blue-and-green spoons and ladles. And — huge history shrunk to adorable nostalgia — there are patriotic pins of Lenin and other Russian icons, for your lapel.

You've been thinking about getting a cellular phone, right?
At Metro Cellular, it's as easy as...

1. Come in to our Cambridge showroom or stop by our new Prudential Center push cart to select your cellular phone. You'll find all of the major brands of mobile car phones and portable (hand-held and pocket-size) phones at competitive prices. Our sales staff can help you choose the model and service plan that best suits your needs and budget.

2. Next, complete a simple credit application. As soon as it's approved we will contact you. (If you already know the model you want, you can apply for credit by phone or FAX.) When you pick up your new cellular phone, your sales rep will show you how to operate it. Finally, you will need to sign a 199-day activation agreement.

3. If you chose a mobile cellular model for your car, we will schedule an installation appointment at our 6-bay Cellular One Certified Service Center. (We have a loaner car so you can run errands while you wait.) Or, if you prefer, one of Metro's trained technicians will come to your home or office with our fully-equipped service van.

So that's all there is to it. ...Why not do it today?

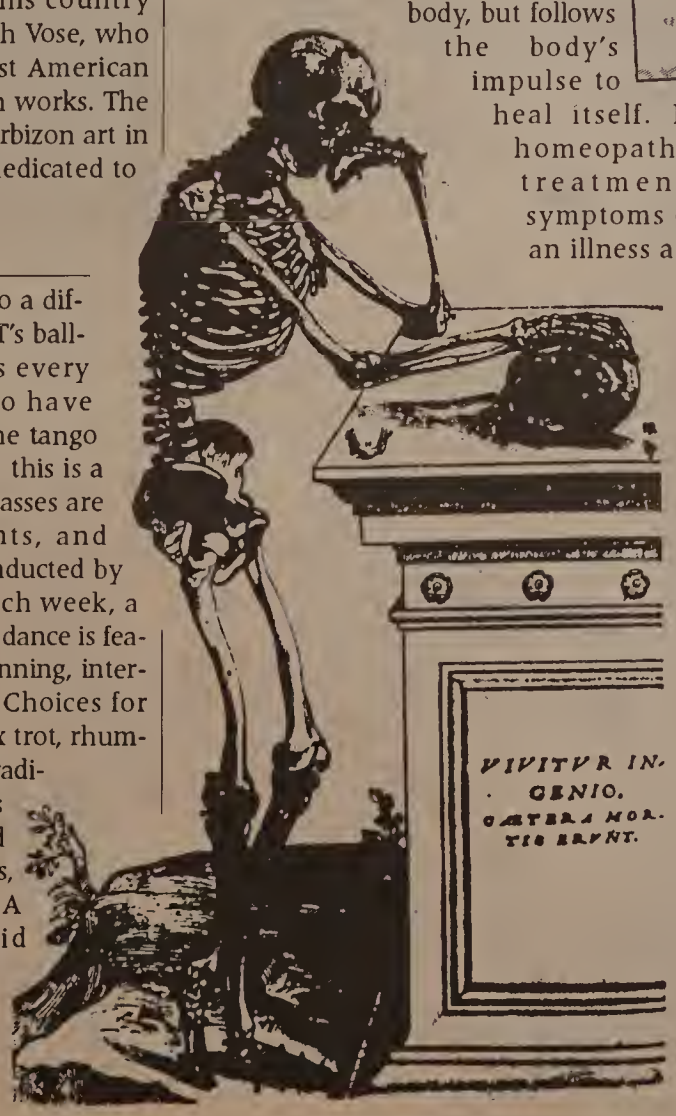
ART



Remember when art was a reflection of life: the painter and the easel before nature, not art copulating with itself? The Barbizon painters, before the Impressionists, brought vitality to the relationship between man and nature in their innovative paintings. Now, more than a hundred years later, Vose Galleries, 238 Newbury St., 536-6176, is holding a rare exhibit of Barbizon painters that includes works never before seen in the United States. Featured are the works of Theodore Rousseau and Jean-Francis Millet. These paintings, initially scorned in Europe for departing from the strict aesthetic rules of the French Academy, found an audience in this country through the efforts of Seth Vose, who in the 1850s was the first American dealer to import Barbizon works. The gallery's first show on Barbizon art in 50 years, this exhibit is dedicated to his vision.

DANCE

Start shaking your cake to a different beat — cheap! MIT's ballroom dance club meets every Sunday. For those who have never danced a step of the tango or for advanced waltzers, this is a guaranteed good time. Classes are taught by MIT students, and advanced sessions are conducted by professional dancers. Each week, a different style of ballroom dance is featured in three levels: beginning, intermediate and advanced. Choices for October include swing, fox trot, rhumba and paso doble — the traditional Spanish bullfighter's dance. Prices are unheard of at 50 cents to $2 a class, depending on skill level. A membership card, valid until August 1994, can be purchased for $15. No former experience is required, and you don't need to bring a partner. Call 258-6554 for more information and impress your friends the next time you go dancing. While everybody else is stuck doing the pogo, you'll be recreating scenes from Strictly Ballroom.

HEALTH

Homeopathy, a not-so-new alternative approach to treating illness, based upon holistic healing of the body, is the focus of the recently opened Harnett's in Harvard Square. Flying in the face of the Age of Science, Homeopathy doesn't presume to understand the mysterious ways of the human body, but follows the body's impulse to heal itself. In homeopathic treatment, symptoms of an illness are not attacked as invasive presences, rather, treatment hastens symptoms to perform their function in healing the body. Homeopathy's application, common 100 years ago, has been regaining popular acceptance in the United States over the last 15 years, although widely practiced throughout the rest of the world and not the least bit alternative. Harnett's, opened by the founder of Bread & Circus grocery stores, is located at 47 Brattle St. in Cambridge, 491-4747.

BOOK

Jaunting through Oxford and Cambridge to unveil English tradition, American writer Bruce Feiler logs his discoveries in a book he aptly calls Looking for Class. Riding the freedom of his naiveté, Feiler's exploits make for good fun and provide insight into that mustiest of all revered institutions, the queen of Anglo academia, the intellectual mother of the likes of John Milton, Lord Byron, Charles Darwin and Bill Clinton. Feiler cleverly plays Oxford's austere and sophisticated reputation against its underbelly of hedonism, discovering behind its "prim Victorian mask a thoroughly modern world of sin . . . . With their volatile mix of youth, wealth, and overeducated hormones, Oxford and Cambridge are probably the two most concentrated centers for decadence anywhere in the country," he concludes. Looking for Class, published by Random House, $23, follows the success of Feiler's previous book, Learning to Bow, a humorous account of his educational experiences in Japan.

WRITING

Writers, playwrights, poets and diarists: a house dedicated to encouraging and developing writing and a literary community has recently opened in Cambridge. Within four spacious floors of a Victorian house, the Company of Writers, 930 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, 492-TYPE, which opened in late August, hosts classes, literary events, guest speakers, dramatic readings and book groups. The Company welcomes all writers, beginners or veterans, English or foreign. Writing classes range from breaking creative blocks to getting published. There are also classes such as "Writing and Illustrating a Contemporary Picture Book" and "Rejoicing With Joyce's Ulysses." At the company, writers can find attentive audiences for their work either in classes, at readings every second Thursday of the month, or through networking with other Boston writers. A cafe is in the works, and the Company welcomes new ideas. Check it out.

VIDEO

Michelle Pfeiffer stars in Love Field, a non-blockbuster, un-Hollywood love story. Pfeiffer plays Lurene Hallet, a dissatisfied housewife who is obsessed with the suave glamour of John F. and Jackie Kennedy. After hearing about the former president's assassination, she decides, against her husband's wishes, to take a bus to JFK's funeral. When she crosses paths with a black man (Dennis Haysbert) and his young daughter, their lives change forever. The naive Lurene learns how close-minded her fellow Southerners are and discovers that there is more to life than what color pillbox hat Jackie wears.

Story and Photos by Jay Paris and Carmi Paris

NEW ENGLAND AFTERNOON: A neglected book, a cup of tea and a comfortable chair make for a luxurious autumn afternoon.

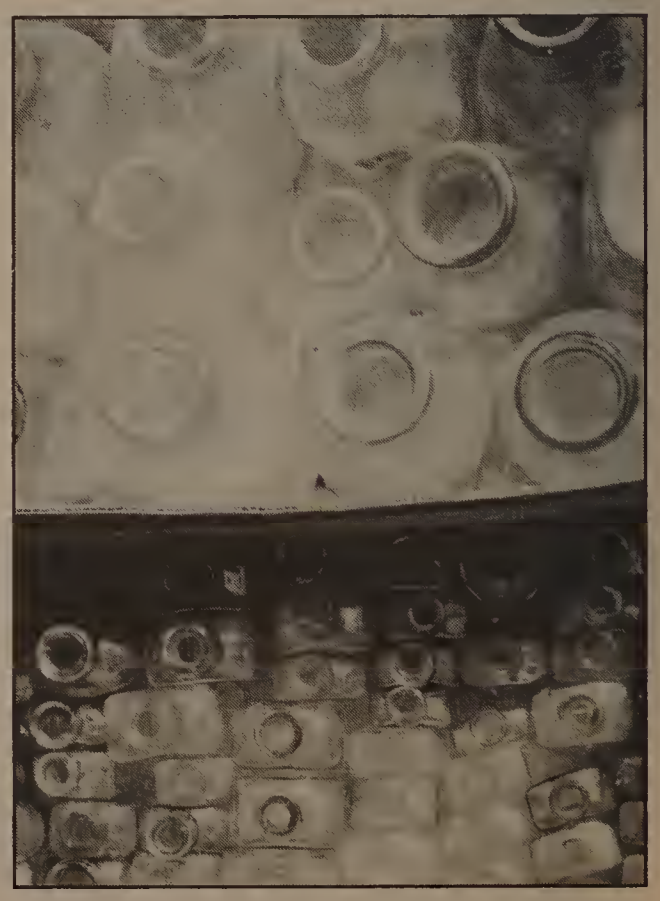
Boston, cooled by night and framed by autumnal light, is crisp and appealing. But outside its borders, New England is vibrantly crimson and yellow from the Connecticut River Valley to the terminus of the Green Mountains to the far reaches of the Maine shore. The October light makes us impatient to travel and is an ever-present reminder that the diverse and colorful geography will never be more striking.

The solution is simple. Head out with a sharpened eye, some Kodachrome and a willingness to get lost. Here are three destinations – north, west and south – reachable on less than a tankful of gas that will rekindle your appreciation of New England's grand season.

Antiquing in the Lower Connecticut Valley

According to tax laws established by Congress in 1966, an antique is anything that was made more than 100 years ago. A collectible, on the other hand, is beyond legislation, loosely defined as anything that was ever made from any era found endearing by someone.



If you are accomplished enough to date Scottish Pebble jewelry or to know the difference between late-Victorian British watermarks and their copies in America, you likely seek antiques. Conversely, if you are amused by the shapes of stones and like trademarks as much as watermarks, you probably enjoy flea markets. In either case, we know of a Connecticut destination two hours south of Boston that in autumn receives little credit for its immense beauty and rich offerings to both serious and whimsical collectors.

Traditionally, Maine and Vermont have been credited with superb collectibles. Those charming villages at mountain's or ocean's edge have appeal but can no longer claim innocence. Antique prices have risen to meet the needs of tourists who will pay more to take home a New England purchase. By reputation, Connecticut is not a state known for moderate prices but we found relative bargains compared to costs we have encountered in the far north. And antique touring does not occur in a void. Good scenery, dining and complementary points of interest improve the hunt. In the lower Connecticut Valley, you can't go wrong.

The first group of towns to consider are on the ocean, convenient to one another and historically pronounced.

Start in Stonington, a village dating to 1649 just a few miles from Route 95, near the Rhode Island-Connecticut border. Although Route 1A leads into the village, any road heading southwest marked for Stonington will do. Getting lost in these environs is almost a pleasure. Your eye will fall upon beautifully restored period homes — Victorian, Georgian and Colonial. The village of Stonington has the antiquated, charming feel of an English village with its narrow streets packed with small enterprises, surrounded by unique, sprawling houses. There are a half-dozen antique stores, many of which specialize in estate silver and jewelry, but we saw also many fine examples of country furniture and marine objects.

If you collect antique silver, visit Neil Bruce Estate Antiques or Orkney and Yost Antiques, both on Water Street, which is the town's commercial drive. For marine paintings and ship models, try the Quester Gallery and Victoria Station, both on Water Street. The prices in Stonington are more than fair and there is plenty of material on display.

GLASS ACT: Connecticut offers antique treasures for the seeker.

SEEK ANTIQUES?

To receive additional information about visiting, dining and lodging in the Connecticut Valley, write Jackie LaBella, executive director of the Connecticut River Valley and Shoreline Visitor's Bureau, 393 Main St., Middletown, Conn. 06457 or call (800) 486-3346.

Head out with a sharpened eye, some Kodachrome and a willingness to get lost . . . (and) rekindle your appreciation of New England's grand season.

Another favorite, Old Saybrook, lies a half-hour farther down Route 95, at the mouth of the ConnecticutRiver. Founded in 1623 by the Dutch and then sold to the British two decades later, Old Saybrook is a yachter's paradise. By a fate that has not spared most rivers opening to the Atlantic, the mouth of the Connecticut was never developed by industry and remains almost pastoral and untouched. It is hard to imagine a more peaceful bench than the one we occupied at Saybrook Point, watching magnificent yachts traverse the river, as sea gulls and swans crossed the expansive sky.

If you wish to browse or shop for obscure items, visit the Antiques Depot of Saybrook Junction where 50 dealers have set up shop, selling virtually anything collectible (moose heads lie next to galvanized-wrench collections).

If seafood is your pleasure, don't miss the Dock and Dine Restaurant on the river. Our sampling of fish and chowder was fresh and succulent.

From Saybrook, we encourage you to head north to the town of Essex, six miles up the Connecticut River, which is a showplace of exquisite multicolored Victorian homes, galleries and shops, interspersed with impeccable gardens. At the end of Main Street is the Griswold Inn, one of two singularly historic inns that we recommend for lodging.

The Griswold has been in continuous operation since 1796 and is still a favorite watering spot of visiting yachters. Another place to overnight is the Copper Beech Inn in Ivoryton, a section of Essex that once made the ivory keys of most pianos manufactured in the United States. The Copper Beech Inn has a four-star French restaurant that has been voted the state's top eatery several times in the last decade. While there, enjoy cocktails in the inn's greenhouse and ask the owners, Sally and Elvin Senner, to show you their displayed collection of antique porcelains.

There is an abundance of antique shops in the area. If you have $10,000 or $20,000 to drop, visit Francis Bealey on Main Street; his building is renowned across the country for its fine early-American furniture and paintings. Less expensive but also showing high-quality items are the Valley Farm Antiques and Essex Colony Antiques. Essex is a town made for browsing. It is hard to leave and some don't, moving their families to this delightful town to participate in the best of New England living.

On your way home, we recommend one last historic stop to try out an antique. At the outskirts of town, on Route 154, you will find the impeccably restored Connecticut Valley Steam Railroad, offering daily sojourns past dense-and-aged forests that glow with color at this time of year.

Balloons Over Vermont

On the Connecticut River, about halfway up Vermont is the town of Fairlee, population 883. Farther west, over a small peak and beyond several dairy herds, is one of Fairlee's suburbs, Post Mills, which has a church, a post office and an airport. All three landmarks are equally hard to find, pleasantly obscured by large maple trees.

According to Ed Page, Post Mill's retired postmaster (whose wife is the former postmistress of nearby Wells River; she retired the same day as her husband), you know you're in Post Mills when you see dirigibles. Most belong to Brian Boland, one of the world's foremost balloonists, who bought the Post Mills Airport a few years ago to escape Connecticut airspace, crowded with hundreds of pilots he had taught to fly. Boland lives above a hangar where he keeps some of his 44 flying machines, offering rides for $150 a shot. Continued on next page

TO LEAVE TERRA FIRMA:

Interested in flying with Brian Boland? Call him at the Post Mills Airport, day or night, at (802) 333-9254. He uses the words "hello" and "balloons" interchangeably but will also help you make overnight arrangements at the Silver Maple Inn in Fairlee, where for a mere $50 a night, you can have a complete lighter-than-air adventure weekend. The drive north from Boston takes about two-and-a-half hours.

Between Memorial Day and Nov. 1, be sure to dine at the Middlebrook Restaurant in Post Mills, which offers extraordinarily original and fresh lunches and dinners at reasonable prices. Or order pizza at whichever parlors are downwind.

CHARMING COLLECTIBLES: Look for silver, estate-jewelry, country-furniture and marine treasures when antiquing in Connecticut.

UP, UP AND AWAY: Mountainous Vermont offers challenging terrain and beautiful vistas to weekend ballooners.

Ballooning in Vermont, with its vast woods and ever-changing weather, offers Boland a challenge that suits his temperament and skill level perfectly. Despite his international reputation as a balloon manufacturer and test pilot who holds seven world records, his greatest joy is to introduce landlubbers to the pleasures of floating over foliage and mountains that span Vermont and New Hampshire.

Boland can accommodate almost any size party or request. He has built and flies gondolas that are wheelchair accessible, baskets specially suitable for the very old and very short, and he even flies a Volkswagen-bus chassis lined with wicker, which he can drive home from his landing site. He has presided over aerial cremations, flies all winter, and even offers midnight ballooning for the adventurously inclined.

Boland, 44, would rather fly than eat, which is a source of mild consternation to those who invite him for dinner. Recently friends who arrived at the airport invited him to go out for pizza in Fairlee. Thinking it was too nice to drive, he gauged the winds, noting that the clouds at 7,000 feet were heading toward the restaurant.

His friends left, certain he would never make it. But as their pizzas arrived, a wild-eyed youth ran into the eatery, screaming that a hot-air balloon had just landed on the restaurant's roof. It was Boland, hungry at last.

Although most balloonists avoid the vastly wooded territories of Vermont, Boland regales in being one of the few who regularly accepts the challenge of finding a crosswind and dropping his basket conveniently near a farmhouse or field. As far as we know, he has never failed.

Resorting to Health

If neither skyward adventure nor hunting for collectibles inspires you to a city escape, our third-and-final option is to head west to the hilly environs of Lenox, Mass. There you will find Canyon Ranch, a world-class spa whose off-season prices are a makeover of how to get away.

In the vernacular of the carrot-juice business, Canyon Ranch has been dubbed "a life-enhancement, mind/body resort to experience permanent lifestyle improvement." What does this mean? Basically, you can decompress and eat extraordinarily well while toning the body and the mind. Much of this happens in real, applicable terms, by eating blissfully well and taking any of 30 exercise classes a day, or playing racquetball and squash, or using one of the five

CALL OF THE WILD: In New England, getting away from it all doesn't necessarily render you incommunicado.

You thought girls were yucky once too.

Dewar's

Dewar's, "White Label" ® 1993 Schieffelin & Somerset Co. NY, NY - Blended Scotch Whisky - 40% ALC/VOL (80 Proof)

indoor-tennis courts or the Olympic pool or the full gym with rows of treadmills, stairclimbers, freeweights and weight machines, or finally, the gyms dedicated to stretching, martial arts and aerobics.

But that isn't all. Because Canyon Ranch is located in one of the Berkshires' most scenic pockets, the resort offers an array of outdoor sports, including canoeing, biking and arduous hikes that follow the Appalachian Trail. End all this caloric output with saunas and Jacuzzis, a class or two on stress management, meditation and biofeedback, and Boston not only seems improper but very distant.

We left Canyon Ranch clear about several worthwhile notions: The relationship between metabolism and digestion is now a science, as is the relationship between how your body is affected by the thoughts that chatter endlessly in your mind. Canyon Ranch has become a leader in defining and teaching these dynamics. In three days, and for about $400 per person all inclusive, we were educated, challenged, rested and recharged.

We once went to La Costa, the infamous and chic spa in California. We were wrapped, hydrated, scrubbed and massaged in Swedish and Japanese ways that were on the cutting edge of beautification and health. In our soothing and sterile midst were personalities from the outer world, the underworld and the silver screen.

La Costa was reviving and pleasant, but it was not life-changing. In recent years, America has been besieged by hundreds of new spas to coax and calm every one of your organs, to say nothing of skin cells. Canyon Ranch is in our backyard, just two hours from Boston, and highly rated in the spa industry for its excellence. And during your stay, you are usually in good company. We met mothers and daughters sharing a getaway, couples celebrating anniversaries, men and women seeking ambitious new training plateaus, casual weekenders and even senior citizens who just wanted to stay healthy.

Jay and Carmi Paris travel widely. Their articles and photographs appear regularly in national magazines, including Conde Nast publications, Yankee and Reader's Digest. They also write and host The Travel Guide on WHDH, aired each Saturday, 3-5 p.m. ❑

FOR A MIND-AND-BODY EXPERIENCE:

The prices for three- and four- day packages prices drop by 40 percent on Oct. 20 and will stay low through the winter. Typically, packages include room, gourmet meals, full use of the health facilities, a massage and a private, professional consultation with one of their many experts in nutrition, medicine, stress management and exercise physiology. Note that meals at Canyon Ranch are a major focus of the day. Every item on the menu is specifically rated for calories and fat grams, but all are so low that you can eat as much as you want. No alcohol is served or allowed on the premises, but good wine is served in town. Canyon Ranch is 130 miles from Boston.

TOP OF THE PYLE: The former head of Harvard Community Health, Thomas Pyle has had the ear of the Clinton administration on health care.

Thomas Pyle

King HMO

BY JOHN KOOKER

The health-care debate launched by President Clinton has been a long time coming and promises to smolder behind wide-open doors until all parties are appeased. As most Americans have found, the debate treads the line between ethics and economy. What some Bostonians may not know is that one of our own has been advising the White House since Clinton's plan began to take shape many months ago.

Boston-native Thomas Pyle, former CEO of the Harvard Community Health Plan and soon-to-be CEO of MetLife's HMO Division, has recently finished his term as special consultant to the White House Task Force on Health Care Reform. A long-standing leader in the Boston HMO industry, it comes as no surprise that Pyle had the exact credentials to offer ground-breaking managerial philosophy.

"HMOs were a big force in stipulating the change," Pyle says, "because they demonstrated that it was possible to have entities that took responsibility for care and integrated multiple specialties and financing."

Still, there are some in the field of health care that don't think change is necessary, although it currently absorbs 15 percent of the GNP. As a champion of efficient management, Pyle brought the idea of a market-based philosophy to health-care reform, using Boston as a practical example of a system that has worked to eliminate unnecessary care since 1969. The competitive element identified by Clinton as essential has been been at work in Boston for years.

Like most agents of change, Pyle has led a diverse and interesting life. After a solitary year at MIT, he dabbled in the communications field at CBS and ABC as a production assistant and page in New York City. At 25, Pyle finally put his managerial skills to use at the Harvard Business School. The rest, as they say, is history. Since 1967, Pyle has held high-ranking positions in firms and served on the boards of directors for corporations far too numerous to list. Suffice it to say, when the new administration decided to take on one of the country's most "bloated systems," Thomas Pyle had the essential health-care expertise to offer.

To opponents averse to change, Pyle, like any experienced adviser, is quick to point out that the new reforms will not be a quick fix to a complicated problem. "The results [of the plan] can only be theoretical at this point," Pyle says.

"The savings to the country will occur over a period of years, maybe three to five, but the plan will make good on its claim."

Beverly Creasey

Positive Criticism

BY JULIE FLAHERTY

At a recent reading of banned books at the Boston Center for the Arts, Beverly Creasey breaks from her role as theater critic to do a little acting. She has chosen a passage from The Wizard of Oz, in which the Good Witch of the North introduces herself to a puzzled Dorothy.

"But I thought all witches were wicked,' said the girl," Creasey reads. In a Billie Burke twitter, Creasey intones Glenda's response, "I am a good witch and people love me."

What Glenda did for the witch image, Creasey may be doing for theater critics. Creasey, a freelance theatre critic, is not a crusty old journalist who would rather give up a limb than a kind word about a play. As an actress and playwright, Creasey has suffered through both writer's block and actor's nightmare, so she admits to empathy and "encouraging the theater."

With few exceptions, "Boston critics are cutthroats," she says. "They think Boston theater stinks, and it's not true. They only praise the huge productions, the Miss Saigons and the Phantoms. There are lots of wonderful small plays in this city."

Creasey has received a lot of flack from her colleagues for being "soft." Among them, Arthur Friedman, the theater critic who pens a column for the Herald, where Creasey is taken to task as often as the shows.

"He likes to make up diseases for me, like `terminal positivitis' and 'adjectivitis,'" she says.

Criticism doesn't phase her. The stage has obsessed her since the time a teacher, in a last-minute, 42nd Street substitution, pushed her out from behind the curtain with the encouraging words, "You don't have a choice." She had no lines, but she was hooked. Now 46, Creasey has acted in and written several well-received plays, and currently runs a theater for new plays, Playwright's Platform.

"It may sound cliche, but I think theater has the power to change the world," she says, sounding a little like the flower-child vegetarian who was married in a Buddhist ceremony. Creasey says what she believes, and she believes in, and fights for, many things. She once went from a gay-rights rally to an anti-nuclear demonstration to a Gulf War protest, all in the same day.

One of her primary causes has been, like Glenda, helping strangers find their way home. For Creasey, the strangers are raccoons, squirrels and sometimes pheasants. For 10 years, she and her husband, David, have been "wildlife rehabilitators," taking care of hurt or abandoned forest creatures in their Brighton home until the animals can get along on their own.

"It's amazing, but they just come to us," says Creasey, whose house abuts the Nonantum woods. "They must have animal TV or something, because they just show up at our door when they need help."

ALTERNATIVE PRESS: "Boston critics are cutthroats," says Beverly Creasey, who writes empathic reviews and runs the Playwright's Platform.

The Fat Lady Sings

Rubens Blockbuster Is an MFA Curator's Dream Made Flesh, as Director Shestack Departs for D.C.

The 17th-century Dutch master, Peter Paul Rubens, featured in the Boston Museum of Fine Art's The Age of Rubens, loved flesh. Lots and lots of pink-and-puffy flesh. From beefy warriors, Greek gods and biblical heroes, to dimpled, full-figured women. In a famous portrait of his teen-age second wife, Helene Fournement, she is depicted nude, wrapped in fur that reveals her ample bosom, as well as exposing what would now be called cellulite on her knees. How taste has changed. This famous Rubens painting is owned by Vienna's Kunsthistorisches Museum, which installed From Brueghel to Rubens by rehanging its permanent-collection galleries to form bookend references for works by the Flemish masters Brueghel and Rubens.

ALAN SHESTACK: Outgoing MFA director

The magnificent Vienna exhibition, which I viewed last April, proved to be stiff competition for MFA curator Peter Sutton's efforts to secure loans of Dutch masterpieces to bring to Boston. Under such circumstances, museums will often lend to one but not both exhibitions. Sutton had to look for loans largely from American collections, such as the great Prometheus and the Vulture, from the Philadelphia Museum of Art.

But even more critical than securing loans was the effort to raise money for this very expensive, and more than likely, never-to-be-repeated special exhibition. During the 1980s, museums routinely found generous corporate sponsors for their blockbuster shows, which had a potential for half-a-million visitors during a three-month run. Last year's Matisse show at the Museum of Modern Art in New York drew just short of a million visitors. Indicative of the generally hard times of the 1990s is the fact that the MFA was unable to find a major sponsor for the Rubens exhibit and considered canceling the project, as it had earlier done when attempting to organize a survey of the French painter Edouard Manet. Similarly, the museum's shot at an epic Rembrandt show a couple of years ago was usurped by the Rijksmuseum in Amsterdam.

To raise money for the Rubens show, Sutton curated a show of French Impressionist paintings from the permanent collection, which was then loaned for a couple of cool millions to museums in Japan and department-store galleries, which are actually rather grand. Thus, Sutton, whose star is on the rise, got his Rubens show. Way to go.

Negotiating this and other high-stakes deals for the past six years has been MFA director Alan Shestack. In particular, he has logged exhausting frequent-flyer miles while negotiating a long-term loan agreement with a new museum being built in Nagoya, Japan. When this contract goes into effect a couple of years from now, it is expected to offset what has risen in the past few years to an annual deficit of $3 million. Because of this deficit, Shestack was forced to reduce the staff by 40 for the first time in the museum's history.

Champagne corks popped during gala receptions in the rehung permanent-collection galleries, as viewers gawked at all that flesh. But for Shestack, it was time, as Yogi Berra would say, for the fat lady to sing. At such a triumphant moment, revelers were stunned to learn that Shestack had resigned to become deputy director of the National Gallery, which unlike the MFA, enjoys direct federal support, has more than double the operating budget and 10 times the acquisition funds. Also, the National Gallery usually wins hands down when it comes to competing for the most prestigious and popular shows.

At the National Gallery, Shestack will organize special exhibitions and negotiate acquisitions and gifts. Undoubtedly, for Shestack, 55, it will be a relief to spend other people's money and leave raising it to the museum's director, Earl A. Powell III.

Shortly before Shestack's arrival, during the prosperous '80s, the MFA had undergone an intense period of expansion, renovation and modernization. It was Shestack's fate to get stuck with the mortgage and staggering bills as we face the hard times of the 1990s.

He did a good job. ❑

BOPHA!

An utterly decent film, the directorial debut by Morgan Freeman would have more impact if it had been made 10 years ago. Bopha! has a dramatic father-son conflict at the center of its 1980 South African-township setting. Danny Glover is the proud, unenlightened policeman who cannot comprehend his son's (Maynard Eziashi) rejection of his authority or the broader rebellion building against apartheid. Given the enormous recent changes and the new battles, the film seems anachronistic. Strong acting by all, although Malcolm McDowell is cliched as the sadistic top cop. While there are some ambiguities in character, the film is painted in rather broad, predictable strokes. Missing are the messy, complicated details of the beginning of a violent personal-and-political transformation in real people.

FOR LOVE OR MONEY

Michael J. Fox plays Doug Ireland, a Manhattan-hotel concierge and small-time hustler. He's a "genie in a suit" who conjures up big tips by fulfilling his guests' wishes. He can even make stale romances fresh again. But when Ireland, also an aspiring hotel owner, must entertain his financier's pouty but beautiful mistress (Gabrielle Anwar), he finds himself torn between kissing up to him and kissing her. Anwar is charming and Fox looks good in a suit, but both are a bit stiff (too much starch, perhaps). The laughs are limited and the eccentric minor characters in the hotel get the best ones.

The Fugitive is quintessential Harrison Ford. No one cracks nervous jokes while under fire quite the way Ford does, and since the part of Doctor Kimble, the film's protagonist, calls for a lot of that, it fits Ford like a glove. As the falsely convicted killer of his beloved wife, he wins our sympathy. As the escapee pursuing his wife's killer, he wins our admiration. And as a daredevil fugitive who risks life and limb to evade Tommy Lee's hardheaded but good-humored lawman, he wins our attention. Our attention drifts, though, as the spectacular action/chase scenes are replaced by the dry details of Kimble's investigation. We are too prepared for the ending, which winds down in trite anti-climactic fight scenes.

M.R.D'Entremont

THE GOOD SON

Macaulay Culkin shocks as the precocious but sadistic Henry, who seems angel-like to everyone except his visiting cousin Mark (Elijah Wood). The tension builds as Mark continually uncovers and tries to expose Henry's dark side to deaf adult ears. Shot in Cape Ann, Mass. and Minnesota, the film is packed with effective, ominous "height" imagery: cliffs, bridges, wells and tree houses. Henry's lack of conscience and anti-social behavior are given no psychological explanation, but Culkin is quite convincing as the bad son and we readily accept him as just plain evil. Not recommended for children.

Forget character development. Forget plot. Even the scary parts — and there are many — don't go over the top. The dinosaurs rule Jurassic Park, and they are amazing. They look real. The only entertaining humans are Dennis (Wayne Knight), a treacherous, whiny computer genius responsible for the dinosaurs' running amuck in Jurassic Park, and a greedy, cowardly lawyer (Martin Ferraro) who deserves to be turned into dinosaur food. If you wish lawyers were an extinct species, you'll enjoy director Steven Spielberg's visual lawyer joke. The talents of Laura Dern, Sam Neill and Jeff Goldblum as scientists are utterly wasted.

K.Wilson

KING OF THE HILL

A gritty, steamy, down-and-out version of The Wonder Years. The film's hero, Aaron (Jesse Bradford), does more than blush at giggling, pubescent girls in the school cafeteria; he also deals with the harsh, sordid life of St. Louis during the Depression. Prostitution, eviction notices, Hoovervilles and suicide are just some of the realities that force Aaron into premature manhood. Each scene brings us to new depths of discomfort (and horror), but still we want more. As ordinary brush strokes can result in a classic painting, so the vulgarity of each scene gives this film a unique beauty. The excellent casting includes Elizabeth McGovern as the hotel prostitute and Karen Allen as the kindhearted teacher.

MALICE

Good campy fun, although it's apparently meant to be a serious thriller. Taken at face value, the film is utterly ridiculous in all dimensions: plot, direction, acting, and most of all, writing. The marriage of a Yuppie college-town couple, played by Bill Pullman and Nicole Kidman, becomes strained after the new hot-shot doctor in town (Alec Baldwin) rents a room in their house. When Baldwin botches an operation on Kidman, she takes the huge settlement and leaves the dazed Pullman, who decides to track her down and discovers things aren't quite what they seem. Adding to the mess is a tossed-off subplot of a serial killer on campus. The best line belongs to the ultra-confident Baldwin: "I am God." Lots of shots of Smith College and Boston.

There's a moment that best captures True Romance's spirit: Patricia Arquette picks up the top of the toilet tank and slams it over her attacker's head. In a just world, someone would do the same to the makers of this movie. In Detroit, Christian Slater and Arquette meet grungy-cute, fall in love, marry and then head for L.A. with a suitcase full of cocaine stolen from the Mob. The movie offers a fast-forward romance; mucho macho posturing and gut-wrenching violence that screenwriter Quentin Tarantino takes to its Reservoir Dogs-like logical, absurd conclusion. There are puke, my-name-is-Dick and toilet jokes galore; endless pop-culture references; and dialogue that sounds like bad Mamet. True Romance is all smart-ass attitude; it thinks it is sooo cool.

Another charming — and moving — comedy from Ang Lee about generational conflicts in a Chinese-American family. A gay son, who is still in the closet and beset by the matchmaking efforts of his parents, decides to marry one of his tenants, a spirited Chinese painter (May Chin) who needs a green card. With his lover pretending to be his roommate, the situation gradually gets out of hand as a raucous wedding banquet becomes unavoidable and his visiting parents linger in his house. What makes Lee's films special are not only his wonderfully light touch and skillful pacing, but the sadness that suddenly wells in his characters. Standing out are the striking, likable Chin, and Sihung Lung, marvelous as the father everyone is trying to protect from the truth.

Guy Vs. Girl Flicks

"... Men see the advertisements for The Age of Innocence with the flowers, the fancy dress ball, the costumes, the smoldering looks, and think: "Chick flick! Forget it."

THE JOY LUCK CLUB: The ultimate girl flick.

Woo! Woo! No, it's not Arsenio Hall. It's John Woo night at the Brattle and tonight's feature, The Killer, about a professional assassin, is one of the Hong Kong director's most popular films. Whenever the killer outdoes himself, the mostly young-and-male audience raises the Woo cheer. Since the movie's body count is, oh, maybe 100, there's a whole lot of Woo Woo-ing going on.

Talk about contrast. The next night, across the river at the Museum of Fine Arts, a mostly female audience sniffles and honks its way through a Friends of Film preview of The Joy Luck Club. Directed by Wayne Wang and based on Amy Tan's best-selling novel, The Joy Luck Club tells the stories of first-generation Chinese women and their second-generation daughters.

There's no doubt about it: There are guy flicks and there are girl flicks. The Killer, of course, is a guy flick. It's an action picture — a guy-flick must. It's fast. It's violent. It's even funny. The violence in The Killer is graphic but repetitive and stylized. It's a game. It doesn't get you in the gut because you know it's not real. The Killer quickens your pulse and pumps your adrenaline. The effect is mindless sensation, like riding with your hands up in the front seat of a roller coaster. Woo dazzles with his style and technique. No wonder the audience cheers.

A woman demands feeling, not action. The emotional connection between characters is a key ingredient. A movie has to tug at her heart, not get her adrenaline pumping. A girl flick doesn't have to be a romance, although it often is. However, if it doesn't act out her fantasies, it has to at least address her issues and concerns.

The Joy Luck Club

Directed by: Wayne Wang
Screenplay by: Amy Tan and Ronald Bass
Based on the Novel by: Amy Tan
Playing at: Loews Copley

The Joy Luck Club tackles four mother-daughter relationships (Audience: sniff, sniff. Daughter: "Mother, you don't know what power you have over me." Audience: honk, honk.) In the process, the film looks at women's roles, their senses of self-esteem and the need to value oneself even when society doesn't.

Many girl flicks focus on domestic details such as meals and furnishings to explore relationships and character. (Water for Chocolate, a surprise girl-flick hit, goes so far as to equate cooking with white magic.) The Joy Luck Club is no exception. In addition, Wang and Tan use domestic details very effectively to portray Chinese/American cultural differences.

The Joy Luck Club moves at a girl-flick pace, which means many men will find it slow going. Women seem to enjoy slow-paced movies more than men. They like the build-up. Maybe these tendencies reflect the difference between men's and women's sexual pace and rhythms. Or the fact that women live longer and have more time. Or that women tend to be the nurturers and nurturing takes patience (just watch a woman trying to get her small children out of the house and into the car). Maybe they are just hard-wired differently.

Women's taste for domestic details and a slower pace helps explain why they like period pieces. Men see the advertisements for The Age of Innocence with the flowers, the fancy dress ball, the costumes, the smoldering looks, and think: "Chick flick! Forget it." They go only because their girlfriend or wife insists, assuring them it will be fine, after all, because it's directed by the guy who made Taxi Driver and Goodfellas.

There are all sorts of variations of the guy vs. girl theory. Younger guys like slice-'em-and-dice-'ems. Younger girls like romances with female pop stars. Many movies have girl-and-guy elements. The Fugitive is a guy film, an action film with a capital A, but it has girl stuff, too: Harrison Ford as Dr. Richard Kimble is handsome and sensitive; he's loyal to his beloved wife's memory; he saves people's lives, he really cares. Fortunately, a good movie (as are all the films mentioned) transcends any and all categories and generalizations. ❑

The Age of Insolence

"... Dazed and Confused is a white, suburban, middle-class answer to Spike Lee's masterly Do the Right Thing and asks similarly tough questions of morality ..."

1976 might be recalled as the grand old flag-waving year of America's Bicentennial — 200 years of freedom — but for Austin, Texas, filmmaker Richard (Slacker) Linklater, now 31, that was when he entered a four-year tunnel of unconformity and mediocrity, the American high school.

Dazed and Confused is Linklater's knowing return to the original era of bell-bottoms, '60s burn-outs and the bump-your-head Gerald Ford presidency. But there's nothing nostalgic about his acidic trip in time. An age of innocence? "If these are the best years of my life, remind me to kill myself," declares one of his 1976 teen-agers.

Things were awful back then. Guess what? They're still awful. The stench of '70s living has blanketed the 1980s and 1990s. It's the same sad latchkey life, but with handguns, cable and the ubiquitous computer. Linklater, discussing Dazed and Confused, strikes the pessimistic note of many of his characters. "I honestly don't think the situation of the American teen-ager has changed that much in the last 30 or so years," he says. "They're forever battling the same oppressive forces — school, parents, a society that doesn't give them any space of their own."

If Linklater sounds polemical off-screen, he keeps his position papers to himself in Dazed and Confused. The beauty and integrity of the film is that Linklater trusts the audience to figure out what this complicated, multifaceted story is telling us. We watch several dozen teen-agers through 18 hours of time — from the May afternoon of the last day of the school year, through the troublesome after-school ritual hazings (more about them below), through the evening's partying, and into the next morning, when everyone crawls home.

Obviously, parents and teachers suck, and they're predictably hapless and ineffectual in Dazed and Confused. But what do we make of the teen behavior? When male characters we sort of like chase down helpless eighth-graders and paddle them mercilessly because . . . well, that's what you do on the last day of school? When the senior girls round up the 13- and 14-year-olds, swear at them, humiliate them and break raw eggs over their heads and backs? When our sort-of protagonist, Pink (Jason London), the skeptical high-school quarterback, senselessly overturns trash cans?

HAZING DAYS: High-school senior girls torture freshmen in Richard Linklater's Dazed and Confused.

IF YOU GO

Dazed and Confused

Directed and written by: Richard Linklater

Playing at: Loews Nickelodeon

Dazed and Confused is a white, suburban, middle-class answer to Spike Lee's masterly Do the Right Thing and asks similarly tough questions of morality. What is "the right thing" to do? The overwhelmingly popular option for Linklater's teens is to act like assholes, on this special day in May. Most interestingly, the adults in town, by shutting their eyes to it, comply with the cruel hazing — sadistic conformity pretending to be anarchy — and with the teen law-breaking. The major absence in Dazed and Confused is cops. Clearly, the police allow this stuff every year.

Linklater is insinuating that the powers-to-be know that being asshole teen-agers is necessary training to be asshole sorority-or-frat collegiates and, finally, asshole adults.

It's all pretty creepy, but what teen-ager, no matter how weird or marginal, can resist completely the call of the herd? Dazed and Confused's three intellectual, geek teens — philosophers, liberal ACLU types — make an appearance at the big dumb party, fascinated by all the straight bozos whom they badmouth and find repellent.

Does Linklater's vision carry? I remember me and my chess-playing, poetry-writing, jazz-crazy, beatnik cohorts showing up at the high-school graduation celebration in the woods in Columbia, S.C., and sneering at all the philistine future Young Republicans. Until I got drunk and brave and — wow! — actually kissed Molly, the blond cheerleader, on her popular mouth. ❑

McWine

"... The basic line-up will reportedly feature McChard, McCab and McBlush ..."

McDonald's Corp.'s recent decision to introduce wine service at each of its thousands of outlets has sent shock waves through the business world and ignited a long-simmering debate among hospitality-industry insiders. Citing the growing public clamor for fast wine, some analysts suggest lagging corporate profits might well trend briskly upward as a result of this bold innovation.

"Here is an amenity," declares a highly paced spokesman, "which sets us apart once and for all from the other burger joints."

Experts on dining habits, however, feel that Americans remain too uncertain about which wines complement which sandwiches to have the gamble pay immediate dividends. Findings released by the just-concluded International Symposium on Wine and Chopped Meat, New Directions for the 21st Century support this view.

Long respected for its daring approach to production and marketing, the fast-food monolith has announced it intends to proceed quickly with plans to manufacture and trademark its own wine brands. The basic line-up will reportedly feature McChard, McCab and McBlush, while selected markets will also begin testing McOaky Chard and McSteely Foo-may.

In efforts to reduce capital expenditures for this expansion, McDonald's intends to integrate the production of burgers and fast wines at the same processing facilities. The results of heretofore top-secret research have shown that in most cases identical equipment and techniques can be employed to make both types of products.

McDonald's winemakers appear genuinely excited about the quality of the new wines they are producing. Citing an extensive background in hamburgers as an indispensable aid in helping understand the popular palate, these innovators have a number of projects in the works.

First, they are working on a new concept for the diet-conscious: flavor-free wine. First, the grape juice is stripped of all organic compounds by placing it in a massive centrifuge. After any trace elements of taste are discarded, a few of the other wine components that have been fractioned out are gradually added back to the clear neutral liquid.

In an opposite vein, there have been ongoing experiments in the production of high-fat wine. "Our core customer hasn't liked wine much," one highly placed source confided, "because it's not greasy enough. He's a born rebel and he doesn't care at all what the doctors or dietitians or do-gooders say. He wants his fat when he wants it, whenever he walks through the arch.

A number of thorny problems remain. Enthusiastic spokesmen may contend that the new wines taste fabulous, but there are health concerns to address. Calorie-conscious burger lovers must be made aware of the consequences of ingesting fast wine. What of the problem of additives? And pesticides? And the dread sulfur dioxide? Aren't the health-aware among the fast-food set entitled to understand fully the risks involved?

Then, too, the ever-present issue of wine-and-food-matching will not disappear. Company experts feel they have solved this puzzle of what to order with what by color-coding the selections. But this may be too simplistic an approach. When it comes to selecting wine, one might well ponder: by holding the pickles, does this not entail a whole host of implications?

Whoever said "Fine wine takes time" was right, and the moral of this story is: This column is a Mcjoke. ❑

Guest Dining Review / R.E. Brunson

TRATTORIA WITH A TWIST

"... Maurizio's Ristorante's food is definitely Italian but shows adventurous touches in its ingredients and combinations ..."

Maurizio and Linda Loddo opened Maurizio's Ristorante Italiano only 12 weeks ago and already the restaurant has established a unique niche in the crowded Hanover Street-restaurant scene. The street-level dining room's bone-white walls and colorful, abstract paintings evoke the sophisticated atmosphere of a New York bistro, rather than the usual trattoria style evident in most of the neighboring restaurants. Linda manages the front of the house and Maurizio is in charge of the kitchen. Maurizio is no stranger to the North End, having previously worked at both Giacomo's and Il Panino. Maurizio's Ristorante's food is definitely Italian but shows adventurous touches in its ingredients and combinations. Greatly enhancing our dining experience, it goes beyond what is generally considered traditional Italian fare.

BISTRO: Maurizio's decor is unusual for the North End.

Our server, Kate, greeted us with a basket of fresh bread and a plate of garlic olive oil. Pleasant and professional, she deftly answered our questions about the menu and enthusiastically described her favorites. Patience is one of her virtues; our party took a half hour to order. For appetizers, we chose the antipasti plate of pepperoni, prosciutto and fromaggio ($7), the cream-of-lobster soup (crema di aragosta) ($3.25), and the day's special, mussels in cream-garlic-and-ginger sauce ($6). The antipasti plate, which was beautifully presented and drizzled with an herbed olive oil, included flavorful slices of prosciutto, tart Pecorino romano cheese, and wonderful marinated red peppers that were the best our party had tasted. The cream-of-lobster soup was a dark-orange color and had an intense lobster taste. With very little cream added, it was light and delicious, but it was a bit of a shock to taste buds expecting something like a lobster bisque.

The hands-down favorite at the table was the special appetizer of mussels in a cream-garlic-and-ginger sauce. More than a dozen small, tender mussels, looking like an exotic flower, were swimming in a pool of creamy, yellow sauce that was hot with fresh ginger. To our minds, it resembled a Thai dish. The sauce was amazing; it not only tasted great, it also cleared the sinuses.

The meal continued with the arrival of our entrees. The special of veal chops with mushrooms ($16) contained tender chops, cooked as ordered, covered with a delicious rosemary-garlic-and-white-wine sauce, and smothered with a mound of fresh porcini and shiitake mushrooms. The dish, full-bodied, rich and very satisfying, was accompanied by a side of roasted red potatoes. The linguine with clams and mussels (linguine con vongole e cozze) ($12.75) was a nicely presented, oversized serving of linguine with pesto sauce. Clams ringed the outside of the dish, with a circle of mussels in the middle. The shellfish were good, as was the homemade pesto with its coarsely chopped basil. As much as we loved this dish, we couldn't finish all that pasta. Next, the chicken with sage (petto di pollo al burro e salivia) ($13.75) arrived with two split chicken breasts in a white-wine-and-sage sauce topped by a layer of mozzarella cheese and a sage leaf. The chicken was plump and tender.

It was difficult to forge ahead after all the food, but there is one dessert that is always a must-try in an Italian restaurant — if it is homemade — tiramisu. The tiramisu made by Maurizio came in a nice portion. The ladyfingers, dark with espresso, had a filling that was creamy and luscious, even though it appeared not to have been made with marscapone.

One of our party was away from the table when the dessert was served; upon returning, the dessert had disappeared. Feeling guilty, we ordered a second serving. Unfortunately, it also arrived before he returned. After the last bite was gone, the consensus was in: all in all, the atmosphere, food and service were very good.

What more can a diner ask for? ❑

If it were a planet, it would be Pluto. An island in the stream. A speck of rock in some parallel universe. Remote. Isolated. As far from reality as we know it or could ever begin to imagine or comprehend it.

We realize another bottled water is the farthest thing from your mind. May we suggest one that's even farther?

until you reached the shores of Antarctica. It is precisely this location, so completely and utterly cut off from the influences of civilization, that accounts for one of the most breathtakingly pristine environments in the world.

Iceland is like no other place on earth. Within a whisper of the Arctic Circle, it is enveloped by the sea. So apart is it from the rest of the world, you could journey south and not see land again until you reached the shores of Antarctica. It is precisely this location, so completely and utterly cut off from the influences of civilization, that accounts for one of the most breathtakingly pristine environments in the world.

As you can well imagine, the air here is remarkably clear, the land virtually indistinguishable from that which it has been for millennia. And the water. Let us tell you about the water.

We call it Akva. A spring water that flows up from a place far below the ice and rock. Untainted. Untouched. Unspoiled. And of such a purity that it is difficult, if not impossible to conceive of another quite like it.

We think you will agree once you've tried Akva for yourself. What you will discover is a surprisingly soft taste. Crisp. Clear. Free of sodium. Free of impurities of every sort. The end result of a natural, geophysical purifying process unique to Iceland.

We can understand, of course, your lack of excitement upon hearing the news of yet another spring water. There are, we know, so many. All of which would have you believe they are the purest thing since the angels.

We do think, however, you will find Akva refreshingly different and worth the modest price of sampling. To do so, we suggest your favorite corner market or deli.

There now, you see? It's just like we've already told you. There really does exist a chance to find a genuinely pure water in this world. Even if it is a bit remote.

Akva spring water. The pure soul of Iceland.™

Let Them Eat Cake

One of the privileges of being an adult is that one can eat dessert first. For those that put dessert first, La Grande Faire is returning to the Atrium in Chestnut Hill on Sunday, Oct. 17, from 7:30-11:30 p.m. The event features a vast assortment of desserts, chocolate and otherwise, from pastry chefs throughout the Boston area. Fine wines, liqueurs, coffees and cheeses will also be available for sampling. Clowns, mimes and jugglers will be on hand to entertain, along with Blue Heaven, a nine-piece R&B band. Tickets are $25 in advance and $30 at the door with proceeds supporting the Brookline Arts Center, the Brookline Foundation and the Brookline Music School. For tickets or more information, call La Grande Faire, 566-5715. And don't forget to leave room for dinner!

Fall Menu Preview

As the seasons change, look for changes in the menus of local restaurants. Icarus in the South End is bringing back juniper-crusted venison with cranberry-and-walnut -chutney to the fall menu. The fresh venison comes from New Zealand and is trimmed into filet mignon-style medallions. Daddy O's in Cambridge is having a tasting of West Country hard ciders on Sunday, Oct. 17, and a special fall-harvest menu for the following week that includes a pork loin braised with apples and a maple-tart tatin. Anago Bistro, also in Cambridge, has brought back Manila clams with broccoli rabe and a grilled-beef tenderloin with roasted, golden beets and snap peas. The new trattoria, Il Panino, on Franklin Street is offering grilled shrimp on lemon leaves and a fresh catch of the day served in crazy water (secret recipe) as signature dishes in the fine-dining restaurant on the second floor.

Look for the new restaurants in the Prudential Center to open later this week. The menu of the new Dick's Last Resort will feature food served with all the finesse of a bricklayer in a metal bucket. There will be buckets of ribs, catfish and crab legs along with froggy legs de Kermit. Each night, Dick's will feature local bands playing jazz, blues or rock. The place is not for the faint-hearted, since there is no cover, no dress code and no class (ever). Around the corner, next to Saks, the California Pizza Kitchen is bringing an astounding selection of wood-fired pizzas to Boston. The list seems to go on forever: Caribbean-shrimp pizza, Tandoori-chicken pizza, Thai-chicken pizza, Peking-duck pizza and even a B.L.T. pizza. In case a diner wants to run an errand while waiting for the meal, patrons are given personal beepers and are paged when the food is on the way. Will all this go over big in Boston? Legal Seafoods will also be opening soon in the New Pru as will the revamped Ground Round.

Music to Your Palate

A Sunday With the Classics will begin its season at Theatre Lobby in the North End with a Sunday brunch from 11a.m to 2:30 p.m with classical music performed by the Cantabile Trio. The concert brunch is produced by Anthony and Sally Capodilupo in association with WGBH's Ron Della Chiesa and his wife, Joyce, who will prepare the wonderful brunch meal, including desserts. So relax and indulge the taste buds while listening to the music of Mozart, Faure, Schubert, and Rachmaninoff. Additional concert brunches are scheduled for November and December. Call Theatre Lobby for information, 227-9872.

Also filling the dining room with the sounds of music are the Nights at the Opera dinners that have returned to the Cafe Promenade at the Colonnade Hotel on Saturday evenings from 8-10 p.m. Diners are serenaded with arias from their favorite operas while eating a four-course meal. The menu includes an appetizer, salad, entree and dessert, with prices starting at $32.95. Call 424-7000 for information and reservations.

Brewer's Fall Fest

The New England Brewer's Fall Fest will take place at the Bayside Expo Center on Saturday, Oct. 23. Regional microbreweries, brew pubs and beer brands from across the nation will be there with samples. Leading brewmasters will offer their newest beers, ales and stouts, while authors and beer judges speak about the history of beer and the fine art of (partying?) tasting. A home-brew competition is also on the schedule. The event will be held in three four-hour sessions, each with slightly different features, starting at 10 a.m., 3 p.m., and 8 p.m. The evening session will feature live blues and rock 'n' roll music. The ticket price is $18 per session in advance or $25 at the door, with discounted tickets available at Boston Beer Works and the Sunset Grill & Tap. ❑

Hemingway would have loved us.

Hemingway used to hang out at the Floridita in Cuba. That was before our time of course, but we feel sure if he came back and found himself in Boston, he'd head straight for our restaurant.

Where else in Boston can you find authentic Cuban food such as camarones enchilados, roast pork, ropa vieja and pescado a la marinara. Just to name a few.

And now to compliment your dining experience a new wine list ia available as well as Sangria and Spanish coffees prepared at your table.

About Last Night. . . Lauren Dare AKA The Last Call Lady

GO WEST, EVERYONE

"... The crowd at West Street Grill is still a quite-interesting mix, not overly homogeneous, with a high proportion of pretty people, which always makes my night better . . ."

OK, the nights are getting just a wee bit too chilly for me to be standing around in line waiting to get into some dumb bar. I mean, don't these people know who I am? Actually, ha ha, I guess they don't know who I am. Oh, the glamour of writing incognito. Anyway, yes, I did stand in line, enduring goose bumps in my skimpy black outfit and the humiliation of waiting with all the other non-VIPs. This was, after all, the West Street Grill, and I just had to get in, because obviously this is the place where everybody is going these days. Since the old Cornucopia-restaurant space near Downtown Crossing was transformed into the West Street Grill, it has been one of the hip-hop happenin' spots in this town, and it's a good thing, because we really needed one. If you're sick to death of Joe's, Spasso, Paparazzi, et al., and you're looking for something trendy and exciting but not so exclusive that you need pedigree papers to get in, then the West Street Grill is the place to go.

IF YOU GO

WEST STREET GRILL
15 West St.
LAST CALL: 2:00 a.m.

The location, I must admit, is a bit unlikely. West Street is in a kind of nether region somewhere between skid row and the infamous Playland Cafe. Granted, right across the Common are Marais, Zanzibar, and every other meat rack in Boylston Alley, so West Street is not too far removed from civilization. But it ain't no Park Avenue either, baby. This does not seem to deter in the least the yupscale crowd, however, from mobbing the less-than-spacious bar or climbing en masse into the cozy booths.

The crowd is big enough and varied enough that if you've gone out at all in Boston in the past two years, you'll definitely see someone you recognize at the bar. All the old familiar faces are there, and in fact, West Street seems to have lured away most of the habitual clientele from just about every trendy Back Bay boite. You know there has to be something good there if it can induce most of these people to tread below Tremont Street.

This past weekend, the line spilled out the door, and I couldn't even lie my way past the guy at the door. Fortunately, I was saved from complete misery by two nice young men who kept me company while I shivered outside. Just as I was gaining entrance, two friends stumbled past me on their way home, leaving me to fend for myself. Fortunately, this worked out rather well, because as soon as I got inside, I was greeted by a whole table of members of the male persuasion who generously plied me with cocktails all evening. At one point, I did get up to scope out the bar action. There was hardly enough room in there to change your mind, but that didn't seem to bother anybody. The crowd has changed since the Cornucopia days, when the bar was inhabited by what would be called in New York "downtown" types.

The crowd is still a quite-interesting mix, not overly homogeneous, with a high proportion of pretty people, which always makes my night better. After a few cocktails, I was able to throw off the chill I acquired standing in line, and by the time I left, several beverages later, I was feeling very warm indeed. Next time you're wandering through the Back Bay and looking with disgust at all those tired old watering holes, wishing there was someplace else to go, now you know, head West. ❑

A Song for a Larkin

"... I was studying jazz ... and I was really into Brazilian music. Then I did the rock 'n' roll thing ... but I kept finding my acoustic slip was showing ..."

Patty Larkin remembers times when her father said "Think you've had enough?" But Larkin — keenly talented as a songwriter, singer and guitarist — never detoured from her path in music.

"It's just that I keep coming back to it with even more interest and inspiration," the Wisconsin-bred musician says. "Luckily I've been able to make a living at it. That's unique and fortunate."

Indeed, Larkin, 42, has long supported herself on the local scene and beyond, winning nine Boston Music Awards along the way. But her fortunes appear to be taking a quantum leap with Angels Running, her fifth album — and her second for Windham Hill's High Street label.

The rich, impressionistic Angels Running was produced by Ben Wisch and John Leventhal, who both worked on Marc Cohn's latest album, and features guest spots by Mary-Chapin Carpenter and the Story. The record, which earned Larkin a cover story in Billboard, is perfectly suited for the new radio format Album Adult Alternative.

"There's definitely a niche there that wasn't there five years ago," says Larkin, who plays the Berklee Performance Center on Oct. 15 with Leventhal on guitar and Michael Manring on bass.

"I think there has been a constant presence in the marketplace for this music, and it can't be denied," Larkin says, citing groundwork laid by Suzanne Vega, Tracy Chapman and Shawn Colvin. "The thing I like about it is that it's still pretty grass roots-oriented, or underground, and people are still bubbling up from the roots."

Long dubbed a folk singer, Larkin stretched further beyond her own acoustic roots on Angels Running, even playing some electric guitar.

"I liked delving into a little edgier sound, and a little bigger sound, but still having some cuts on the album that I think of as pared down," Larkin says, on the phone from her Wellfleet home. Of the production work, she says, "It was to get some airplay but also just to check out some different arrangements and different sounds."

Before she even entered the studio, she also tried some different approaches in her writing, particularly with lyrics.

"I was interested in how words sound and how they can be used as elements of percussion," says Larkin, who was listening to the likes of Bob Dylan, Nanci Griffith, Greg Brown, Bill Morrissey, Tori Amos and Lucinda Williams. "It was a different approach for me."

Not that Larkin hadn't juggled musical approaches before. Her resume includes performing in a jug band, playing Irish music in Harvard Square and studying jazz guitar at Berklee. "I think all those pieces do combine to make the whole, especially on this record," she says, noting producer Wisch's attitude, which was "'If you played mandolin on that demo tape, you're going to play mandolin here.' It was a great vote of confidence."

PATTY LARKIN: Local songwriter shows her acoustic side on new album, Angels Running.

Songwriting, however, was Larkin's first pursuit. "I was studying jazz, and writing these sort of Latin pseudo-jazz tunes, and I was really into Brazilian music," she says. "Then I did the rock 'n' roll thing, trying to write more in a pop vein. But I kept finding my acoustic slip was showing, and there were songs that I couldn't feature in the band that I wanted to sing, like a softer thing or something with a Celtic influence.

"For me, the acoustic end really made a lot of sense, because I could write in any style, and I could talk to the audience and do humorous songs," says Larkin, who drew notice for light signatures such as "At the Mall" and "Dave's Holiday," then turned heads the other way with "Metal Drums," a song about a toxic-waste dump in Holbrook.

New songs "Do Not Disturb," "Helen" and "I Told Him That My Dog Wouldn't Run" cast their own dark, affecting imagery, while "Might As Well Dance" and "Pundits and Poets" take a more optimistic slant.

"My mother called and said `I hope there are some happy songs on this record, Patty,'" she says, adding her mother's final words, "You do what you have to do."

After all, Larkin does it so well.

ELSEWHERE — Two other great shows fall on Oct. 15. Bluegrass star Alison Krauss and Union Station are at Somerville Theater, while Irish-bred rockers Black 47 play Avalon. ❑

MA AND MORE

"...Yo-Yo Ma's new disc hints darkly at another halfhearted crossover attempt. In fact, nothing could be further from the truth..."

A glance at the list of composers on local cellist Yo-Yo Ma's new disc hints darkly at another halfhearted crossover attempt. In fact, nothing could be further from the truth. Ma's latest recording features rigorous, unusual works in lively performances.

Three of the four works on Made in America (Sony 53126) were made to order. Harvardian composer Leon Kirchner created his Triptych, a dialogue for violin and cello, at Ma's suggestion. Ma's intense, introspective style is brought out particularly well in the first movement, a lonely cello solo.

Ma himself transcribed two of the other pieces on the disc: Bernstein's early Clarinet Sonata and Gershwin's jazzy set of Preludes. The cello transcription of the Bernstein piece works very well, indeed, especially when played (practically sung) as sensitively as it is here. This striking little miniature, more firmly classical than much of Bernstein's later show music, is infused with the same warmth and humanity.

Charles Ive's Trio is the earliest work on the disc but is also, strangely enough, the hardest to grasp. Ives wrote the piece in memory of his college days at Yale. Like most people, he found that certain pop tunes he had liked during his undergraduate days immediately brought back precise college memories. What followed is a typically bizzare piece of Ivesian logic: If one old pop tune makes you feel nostalgic, he figured, then five played simultaneously must make you feel five times as nostalgic. Trio is the result. Occasionally, the texture gets too dense and one can't pick out anything, but Ma, Ronan Lefkowitz and Gilbert Kalish make a strong case for the work. The last movement in particular is suffused with the lyrical memory of youth, a half-glimpsed sepia narrative. Ives would have loved the modern dormitory and quadrangle, with their jarring collage of competing boom-boxes, and that's the kind of image this work fondly evinces.

Sony is brave to release this artist-driven album that refers to popular music but transforms it and keeps it at one remove. The result is certainly a success.

ENTERTAINMENT TONIGHT?

Both minimalist composer Michael Nyman (who composed the film scores for The Draughtsman's Contract, the Cook, the Thief, His Wife, and Her Lover and Prosperos's Books,) and Kurt Weill have had their cabaret songs recorded by the raspy Ute Lemper; both favor a sort of giddy, honking texture; and both, in photographs, seem always to be fumbling with their bald scalps as if adjusting invisible headsets or trying to coax forth djiniis. But while Kurt Weill spent his life trying to make his music more accessible, Nyman is dead-set on leaving behind his considerable entertainment credits in favor of a "serious" classical audience. Nyman's new disc Time Will Pronounce (Argo 440 282-2) may not be on the cutting edge of minimalism, but it proves Nyman capable of writing fresh and enjoyable works that would stand up well in concert.

One of the best selections is his Purcellian romp in praise of Ishtar, the wonderfully titled Self-Laudatory Hymn of Inanna and her Omnipotence. Countertenor James Bowman's self-congratulatory voice hops, skips and soars over pulsing strings, drunken with divinity, exuberant in egotism. It is a lot of fun. For John Cage is an attractive, ceremonial-sounding piece for a brass ensemble, sort of a what-if-the-Gabrielis-met-the-Gershwins-and-did-minimalist-lunch. The Convertibility of Lute Strings is a hectic essay for harpsichord solo, with, once again, a wonderfully exultant climax. Fans of minimalism, and certainly fans of Nyman, will find this an extremely pleasant and rewarding recording.

EMI has just released its wonderful archival recordings of British show-tune- and cabaret-songwriter Noel Coward (The Master's Voice: Noel Coward's HMV Recordings, 1928-1953, Angel 7 54919 2). Like Evelyn Waugh, Coward dished out for his public a dazzling image of high society in the twenties; and like Waugh, he commented on the petty viciousness of the Smart Set as well as its free champagne. His best-known songs are collected here, as well as songs and medleys not normally heard. The selections range from the blithely sentimental to the bitterly acerbic — the latter have worn rather better than the former. Although the recording quality obviously varies in repertoire like this, even his tape lends a pleasant period air to the proceedings. With four discs, the collection will be a bit much for casual listeners. For fans of show tunes and cabaret, the set will be absolutely invaluable. ❑

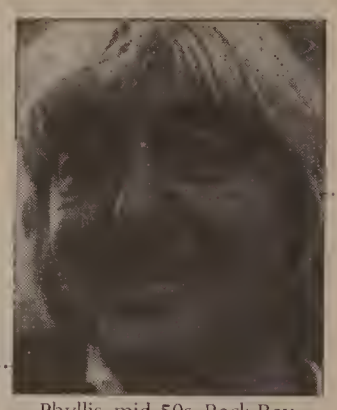
WOMAN ON THE STREET

"What does God look like?"



BY KIM CAVINESS

Chantal, 25, Boston
"I think He's a man, that's what the pictures say ... I don't know if there's a God at all."

Bob, 43, Burlington, Vt.
"Whatever you picture Him to be. There's a difference between a spiritual life and a religious life. I try to live a spiritual life."

Phyllis, mid-50s, Back Bay
"He is invisible ... He could be standing around right here. He's not a man-type or a woman-type — just invisible."

Richard, 44, Boston
"An old man with a white beard and blue eyes"

Yvonne, 26, South End
"God looks like this nebulous nothingness with huge hands that sometimes reach down."

Bill, 41, Jamaica Plain

©1993

BY ROCKIE GARDINIER — OCTOBER 13 - OCTOBER 26

GENERAL FORECAST (If you know your ascendant, read it too)

Onca again hope springs eternal thanks to the Libra new moon — exactly on Friday morning at 7:36 — at 22. Libra, close enough to Bill Clinton's Jupiter to give his ratings a big boost. The Establishment endures, maturity and wisdom get the respect they deserve, traditions are honored (not in the breach) and everyone feels safer while the sun trines stable Saturn this weekend. Meanwhile Venus, slipping into sociable Libra, a sign she governs, makes us more amenable to hugs and kisses, happy meals and all sorts of deals. Negotiate your little heart away, but be prepared to pay full price for peace of mind and/or a piece of the action. Everything becomes enormously expensive yet utterly enjoyable when the sun meets exuberant Jupiter on Monday. You're willing to take a chance on your future, further your education, see the world. Coast on whatever optimism you can maintain dunng the week because, after Scorpio starts (next Saturday at 5:37 a.m.) weirdness prevails. Whether it's because erratic Uranus and delusional Neptune ara meeting for the third of the Triple Conjunctions (exact Monday, Oct. 24, at 2:32 a.m.) or because Mercury is turning retrograde at 6:40 p.m. for three weeks of confusion and disinformation is incidental, although not without incident. This year Halloween is raally scary.

ARIES (MARCH 20-APRIL 19)

Allies and enemies, the self and society. Only big issues this week, no trivialities to disturb your quest for personal fulfillment in an impersonal world. Meanwhile, casual acquaintances, particularly one in a powerful position, could wind up on your side, favoring your cause, partial to your pitch. It pretty much depends on who you're hanging with — your mate, partner or lawyer provides the intro. And thanks to Venus entering Libra, sign of the cosmic soul mate, romanca is in the air, again.

TAURUS (APRIL 20-MAY 20)

The new moon can bnng a new slant on your job description and a friendlier atmosphere among the folks at work. If you've been feuding, you'll make up. Pay attention to what the kids are telling you; young people are dropping clues to how you can go about fulfilling another long-range goal. Getting straight to the heart of the matter matters a lot right now, even if there's a chance you'll get hurt. A generosity of spirit wrapped in cautious optimism this Monday — grab for it while you can.

GEMINI (MAY 21-JUNE 20)

A lucky shot, a shot at love and a chance to walk away with a prize. Games, sports, parties and shows could take up every waking minuta if you let them; however there are words to the wise that need to be said or information about health and insurance that should be exchanged before the weekend is over, certainly before Mercury turns retrograde on the 25th. Then you can party. Mid-June Geminis are in an extraordinary position to capitalize on a business opportunity that takes real brains and foresight.

CANCER (JUNE 21-JULY 22)

The Libra new moon hits home because it affects your roots. What happens over the next four weeks relates primarily to your house, history, Mom, food and the rest of the family. Solidify Thanksgiving plans before Mercury turns retrograde on the 25th, but don't get too carried away by the extravagant sun-Jupiter conjunction and buy everything and invite everyone in sight. However, if you're in the market for real estate, remodeling and a loan to go with it, this could be your lucky week. Next week it's back to playing relationship roulette again.

LEO (JULY 23-AUGUST 22)

Big week with bold moves and broad strokes. Writers, teachers, neighbors and siblings are the instruments of your good fortune, the means to a very happy end. However your real strength comes in partnership with an old pro or scientist of stature. The frustrations you've endured finally make sense, taking it slow and steady suddenly pays off. Exuberance, on tha other hand, while good for your soul, can cost a small fortune. Not that you'd mind, but be forewarned before you start spending.

VIRGO (AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22)

Excellent financial prospects, so concentrate on following the line of least resistance, the rainbow to its pot of gold. Yes, you'll have to make some effort, but luck and charm count far more than sweating and fretting. Plus money from having toed another line in the not-so-distant past and, if you did it right, respect and praise as well. Such excellent potential should not be wasted seeking out new diversions or waiting for messages from spaced-out ex-lovers and other spent sources of inspiration.

LIBRA (SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22)

Great expectations, celebrations and, as soon as tha sun joins jolly Jupiter in your sign, great expense. Another lucky week with endlass possibilities and good times, but not all is frivolity and fun. You might actually receive a material reward for having shown excellent judgment regarding a lover, child or creative project, let's say, enough bucks to pay for the latest round of partying. But don't take anything for granted. Being blessed by the gods won't last forever; it might not last a fortnight.

SCORPIO (OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21)

Information is the key to your next move. Since the Libra new moon falls in your 12th house of mysterious motives, try a little harder to uncover a few facts that'll propel you into the future sanely and safely. Nobody knows for sure where we're headed, all we know is that we're (d)evolving at an alarming rate. So before Scorpio starts, get your personal agenda straight: double-check your reasoning, trust your intuition and have faith they'll lead you to sanctuary. And do it before Mercury turns retrograde in your sign on the 25th.

SAGITTARIUS (NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21)

Something is growing by leaps and bounds, but what exactly is your Jupiter ruler expanding? Your income, Halloween party-guest list, hopes for peace? Count on a professional peer or casual acquaintance to open doors, perhaps put you back in touch with a major influence from college days. This could be an extremely lucky time, particularly if you have a Libra and/or a Leo by your side. Or you may feel it's strictly "business as usual" and take your advantages for granted. Pity.

CAPRICORN (DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20)

This week could well turn out to be the high point of the year. As the Libra sun in your mid-heaven trines your Saturn ruler in your money house, the sacnfices you've endured to obtain what you truly value make a lot of sense and mayba a lot of money. Plus, you're graced with dumb luck just for hanging with your parents, boss or government brass. Dumb enough to go in on lottery tickets together? Next week however is another story. Unexpected changes can throw you off stride, friends may renege papers disappear mysteriously.

AQUARIUS (JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18)

Embrace the Librans in your lifa this week because they're the bearers of good luck, party invitations, travel arrangements and artwork from the Orient. (Libra rules China and is the glyph for Japan). While the Libra sun favors Saturn in your sign, you'll feel happier or at least relieved from whatever burden you think you've been shouldering. The word from tha front office about the future sounds supportive, too. Next weekend, however, is tricky: temporary gains, erratic decisions, weird desires.

PISCES (FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19)

New moon magic can reveal hidden resources, but not the kind you have to dig deep to unearth. Whether it's sheer luck or parental providence, there's financial opportunity in investments, insurance or inheritances. And if bucks aren't your thing, then good fortuna could come through psychological insights, research or hypnosis. Well, maybe you do have to dig deep. A romantic ralationship is easier to deal with once Venus leaves hypocritical Virgo for loving, lovable Libra.

Down-to-earth footwear

By the time these attractive, sturdy shoes have come into being, a number of questions have been asked and answered in good ecological conscience. First, what raw materials, having said "good-bye," now need to say "hello" in a new form? When you are wearing a Deja Shoe (who says environmentalists don't have a sense of humor?) old coffee filters, soda bottles, milk jugs, polystyrene cups, tire rubber, magazines, cardboard and old clothes have been demolished and transformed into an afterlife of sneakers, hiking shoes and oxfords — none of which, of course, sport leather. (Thus bypassing the cycle involving cows, overgrazing, air pollution and deforestation.) Furthermore, to avoid toxic fumes harmful to the workers who make the shoes, water-based adhesives, not dangerous solvent-based adhesives, are used. Deja's corporate policies are definitely environment-first and not just footwear fashion shoelaced into more money, an attitude that certainly will take the pinch off your bunions. Revealing a hint of the goddess (the company's president is a woman, Julie Lewism), one shoe is called the Gaia Rover. Another looks like a very, very, very worn plaid blanket, a veritable Velveteen Rabbit of a shoe. Recycling, after all, means being worn to a useful fare-thee-well.

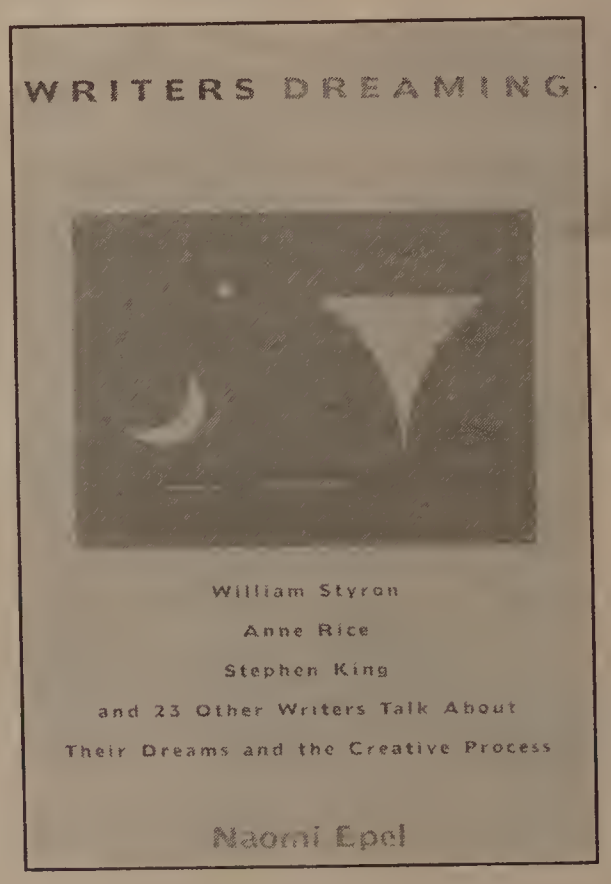
Nantucket Holiday



Not just a summer hangout nor an off-season place for vacation-home owners, Nantucket should still be considered when the leaves are off the trees and the tourists are off the ferry. People for whom away-from-home is either more possible or more desirable at Thanksgiving and Christmas could make a Currier-and-Ives time of it here. Conjure up the island's historic houses and inns with their widows' walk rooftop galleries from which sea captains' wives could look out for whaling ships. Imagine the merry buzz of shops and seasonal doings in Nantucket Town. Think of the movie The War of the Roses, before it got nasty, when the still-happy couple snuggles in snowy, cobbled Nantucket (where, apparently, they should have stayed). Guest houses are open for feasts and celebrations, and you might find residents wearing Victorian costumes. After Thanksgiving, Nantucket Noel festivities begin. During the Christmas Tree Lighting Ceremony, more than 200 trees lend their greenery and illumination, while the Community Sing fills the air. On the first Saturday of December (oh, stay all month!) the Christmas Stroll brings together schoolchildren, merchants, fishermen, residents and visitors for a festive gathering with mulled wine, costumed carolers, and all things Christmas. Make a little holiday history for yourself in this traditional treasure of a place.

Writing's but a Dream

The river of the imagination and the river of dreaming flow alike; it's not surprising that many writers dip into the latter for inspiration. Writer-and-dream-researcher Naomi Epel had the idea of interviewing 26 writers about their dream lives, and the result is a chapter in which each one (William Styron, Gloria Naylor, Allan Gurganus, Amy Tan, Stephen King, Maya Angelou, among others) talks about how they dream, how they write, and the connection — whatever it may be. Many admit to doing their writing in a nearly trancelike state, so a natural whoosh often exists between their writing and dreaming. Styron reports, after sleeping and dreaming, having the lingering image of a young girl he had once actually seen with a concentration-camp tattoo showing under her summer-dress sleeve, which formed the core of the character in Sophie's Choice (causing him to abandon another book he was writing.) Other writers report being visited in dreams by characters they have created in their books; some have written actual dreams into their novels. Sue Grafton, when battling with her ex-husband, started fantasizing about murder. Her dream became a key plot feature in A Is for Alibi. Alan Gurganus recalls a seminal dream he had as a child about fixedly watching a 40-foot-long peacock outside his ranch-house window — a sign he interpreted as meaning that he had the power to imagine the unreal and "to notice as thoroughly as I could." They are lush talkers, these 26. Their real-life and novel-writing questions are posed in their dreams; knots are unknotted and unnoticed problems announce themselves disturbingly, interestingly, making Writers Dreaming a fascinating anthology.

Grape Expectations

American winemakers have little wine worldliness, opines in-house oenologist Sandy Block, a limitation reflected in our domestic output. One heartwarming exception is David Ramey's just-released 1992 Chalk Hill Winery Sauvignon Blanc. Read all about it.

You've been thinking about getting a cellular phone, right?
At Metro Cellular, it's as easy as...

1. Come in to our Cambridge showroom or stop by our new Prudential Center push cart to select your cellular phone. You'll find all of the major brands of mobile car phones and portable (hand-held and pocket-size) phones at competitive prices. Our sales staff can help you choose the model and service plan that best suits your needs and budget.

2. Next, complete a simple credit application. As soon as it's approved we will contact you. (If you already know the model you want, you can apply for credit by phone or FAX.) When you pick up your new cellular phone, your sales rep will show you how to operate it. Finally, you will need to sign a 199-day activation agreement.

3. If you chose a mobile cellular model for your car, we will schedule an installation appointment at our 6-bay Cellular One Certified Service Center. (We have a loaner car so you can run errands while you wait.) Or, if you prefer, one of Metro's trained technicians will come to your home or office with our fully-equipped service van.

So that's all there is to it. ...Why not do it today?

CITY RAVE

COMPILED BY JENNIFER KORNREICH

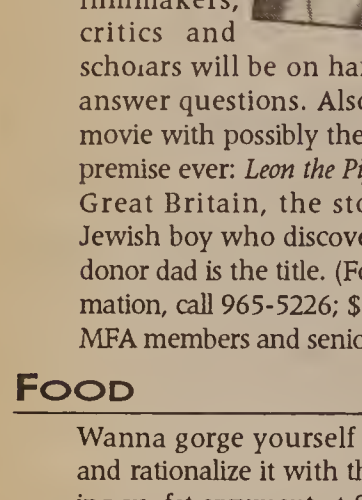
FILM

Between Nov. 11-18, a group of independent filmmakers are producing the fifth annual Boston Jewish Film Festival at the Museum of Fine Arts and Coolidge Corner Theatre. To commemorate the 50th anniversary of the Warsaw Ghetto Uprising, the festival will feature Polish films but includes works from nine other countries, as well. At several screenings, filmmakers, critics and scholars will be on hand to answer questions. Also check out a movie with possibly the best title and premise ever: Leon the Pig Farmer from Great Britain, the story of a nice Jewish boy who discovers his sperm-donor dad is the title. (For ticket information, call 965-5226; $15 public, $12 MFA members and seniors.)



FOOD

Wanna gorge yourself silly? Pig out and rationalize it with the carbo-loading-vs.-fat argument at Sfuzzi's annual Pastabilities Festival (The Atrium at Chestnut Hill, 300 Boylston, 965-7707). Running through Nov. 30, you can enjoy a variety of more esoteric pasta dishes featuring everything from meat and vegetables to unusual spices and sauces.

BOOK

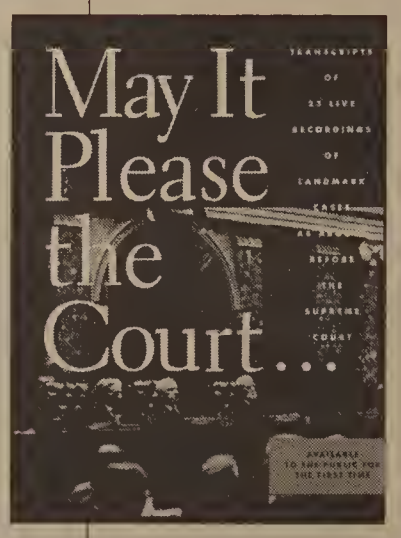
Well, the recession may be hard on magazines' longevity, but Esquire isn't plagued with such problems. In tandem with its celebratory 60th-anniversary issue, Esquire now boasts its first edition of anthologized fiction, Lust, Violence, Sin, Magic (is it me, or is the title suspiciously akin to the Red Hot Chili Peppers' LP?). The intro by Esquire editor Terry McDonnell indulges in some shameless PR for the magazine — he calls his mag the "most important cradle" of New Journalism — but, to his credit, he's compiled a formidable body of work from writers with both literary and journalistic sensibilities. Spanning from the '30s to the present, the 41 stories are arranged into the title's four categories: "Lust" authors include Capote, Bellow and Philip Roth; Steinbeck and Tim O'Brien tell tales of "Violence"; Flannery O'Connor (one of the few token women, but, hey, it's primarily a men's mag after all, and how many men's stories would be featured in Ms.?) and Ethan Canin fall prey to "Sin"; and Gabriel Garcia Marquez and Louise Erdrich whip up some special "Magic." Hindsight and the setup of the book beg the reader to decide: Do these stories form a fictionalized account of history or a historical perspective on literature? Either way, the book is a must for fiction collectors.

CELEBRATION

Do you cringe at the idea of arriving in a room, wearing the same outfit as someone else? Even if it's Halloween? Costume shops around the city are renting an especially high number of period-piece costumes this year. Scarlett-and-Rhett duos have been a big seller, store owners say, as well as Robin Hood-era ensembles. For the more whimsical, cartoon figures are a trendy hit this year, with Aladdin and Jasmine leading the way. (Unfortunately, superheroes are still in style, too.) Bostonians with a dark side are renting Morticia-and-Dracula get-ups. Finally, one source in the South End reports that its current best-seller for the drag-queen crowd is Lucille Ball.

MAYOR LEAGUES

If you thought last year's "Rock the Vote" campaign on MTV was ridiculous, you're gonna love this! Through Nov. 1, Mr. Dooley's Boston Tavern (77 Broad St.) is holding a fun way to raise voter consciousness: the Mayoral Meat and Potato Poll. Order the Thomas Menino Burger or the Jim Brett Burger and cast your ballot in a mock poll. Nov. 1 at 3 p.m. is the Big Eat-Off, followed by the Grand Poll Showdown, hosted by an Uncle Sam. According to Dooley's representatives, Brett has already come in to order his own burger. So far, Menino hasn't deigned to stop by.



COOKING

Whether you're a Francophile, a gourmand or just a '90s type of gal looking for men who'll make you dinner at the end of a hellish day, the French Library of Boston (53 Marlborough St., 266-4351) has just the class for you! Aside from the perpetually sold-out wine tastings, the FLB offers two epicurean options. The first is the Ultimate Dinner Series, which consists of five demonstration-and-tasting classes (one for each course of a traditional French meal) taught throughout the year by master chefs such as Todd English from Olive's. The other, less-expensive route is the individual hands-on classes, which are limited to 15 people and cost $30-35. Bon appetit!

LAW

One of those good ideas that should have been thought of a long time ago: The New Press's May It Please the Court, live recordings of 23 Supreme Court landmark cases since 1955. Edited by Peter Irons and Stephanie Guitton, the $75 package provides a book with background, transcripts and expert opinions, but it's the six 90-minute cassettes that are the real goods. Among the watershed cases are the Watergate trial, Loving v. Virginia (interracial marriage), Miranda v. Arizona (the right to remain silent), Bowers v. Hardwick (gay rights), and of course, Roe v. Wade (if you don't know what this one is about, you're hopeless).

KIDDIE KORNER

Video

Sure, Princess Jasmine's pinpoint of a waist is probably no better for your little niece's self-esteem than the nefarious Barbie. But Aladdin is hipper in ways that Snow White and Sleeping Beauty never were. The kids will appreciate the rapid-fire jokes, executed by Robin Williams and Gilbert Gottfried (and so will you), and finally, with its young street-urchin hero with his mischievous pickpocketing streak, Disney's caught on that we all love a bad boy.

Book

Meanwhile, Maurice Sendak reveals where the wild things really are: in alleys all over America, desperately seeking food and homeless shelters. The renowned children's author deals with pertinent, sobering issues in adaptations of nursery rhymes — no mean feat. We Are All in the Dumps with Jack and Guy leads its young readers through grimy streets riddled with starving vagrants, abandoned babies and urban filth. The artwork is classic Sendak, but because the violence is real this time (how scary could

In the Night Kitchen get?), the cartoons become nightmarish. It might be a good idea to be on hand to answer the young'uns' questions.

Playtime

All you yupsters: Remember "playdates," when you'd pencil your friends' children in for ice cream and Legos with your toddlers? Well, the Boston Public Library at Copley Square has updated the convention so your tots can hone their social skills while sharpening their ever-expanding minds. Through Nov. 16 (except Nov. 2), the BPL devotes Tuesday mornings to little people. From 10-10:30 a.m., the general public is invited to accompany (read: BPL ain't no baby sitter) children 1-3 years old. Between 11-11:45 a.m. is preschool story time for kids 3-5 years old. The morning includes nursery rhymes, songs, "lap jogs" and "finger games." On Thursdays, the BPL accommodates organized groups of children by appointment For more information, call 536-5400, ext. 328.

TWO WEEKS WORTH OF IMPROPER PICKS

WEDNESDAY

27 Get in the Halloween spirit a little bit early this year with Twilight Mystery Tours. Explore Boston's darker side as you delve into both the solved and unsolved crimes of this city's sinister past (remember the Boston Strangler?). This 90-minute tour will take you right to the scene of the crime. Call 542-2525 for all the gory details.

OENOLOGY: Learn how to match your grape to your entree at the French Library's series of wine classes.

THURSDAY

28 The fur could fly at tonight's live mayoral debate between candidate Jim Brett and current Acting Mayor Tom Menino. At the Boston Public Library's Rabb Lecture Hall, the face-off will be broadcast live on WBZ-TV (Ch. 4) beginning at 7 p.m. Call 536-5400, ext. 336.

FRIDAY

29 Actor/author/comedian Richard Belzer, who has performed in TV-comedy shows as well as movies and TV shows (most recently Homicide), performs tonight and tomorrow night at Nick's Comedy Stop, 100 Warrenton St. Shows at 8:30 and 10:30 p.m.; tickets are $14. Call 482-0930.

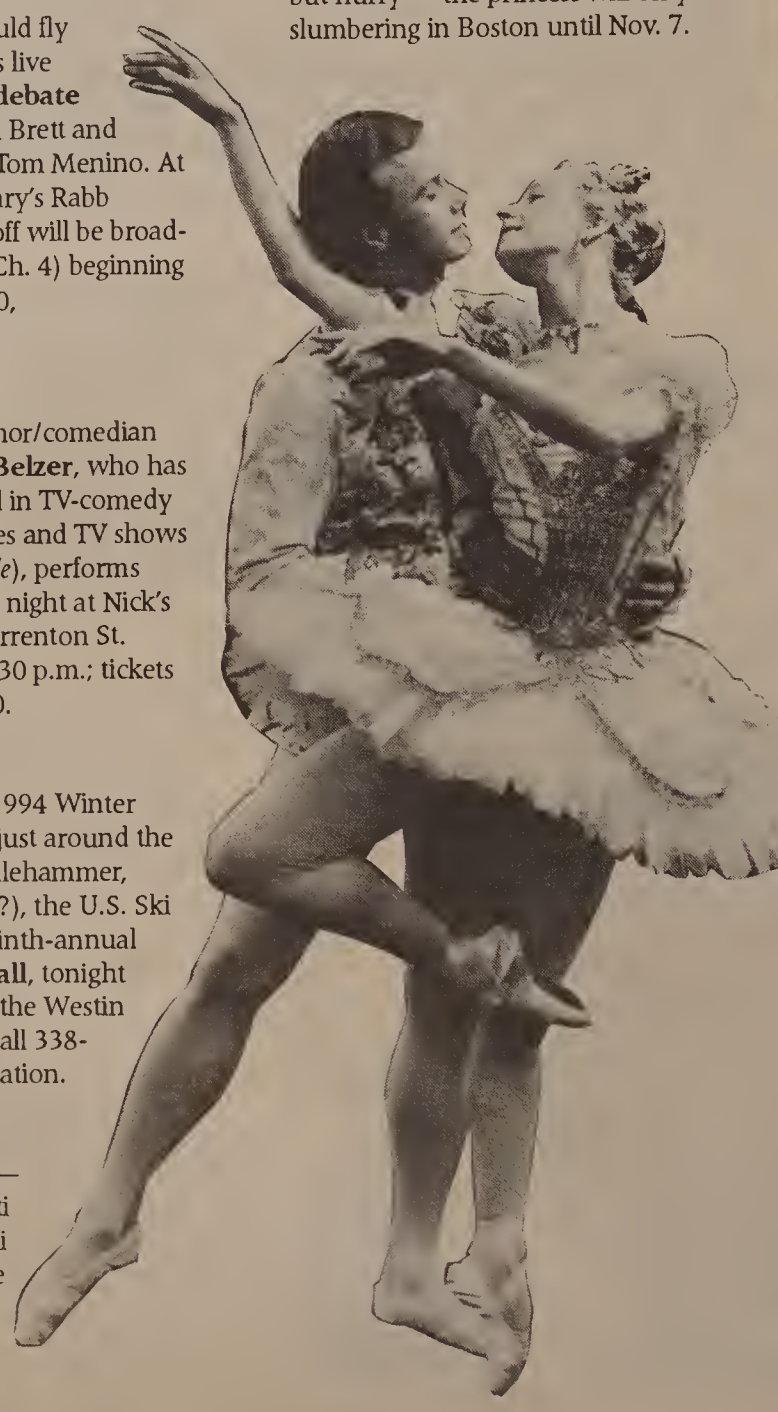
SATURDAY

30 With the 1994 Winter Olympics just around the corner (Lillehammer, Norway — remember?), the U.S. Ski Team stops in at the ninth-annual New England Ski Ball, tonight from 6 p.m.-1 a.m. at the Westin Hotel, Copley Place. Call 338-2288 for ticket information.

SUNDAY

31 Go figure — eight! Kristi Yamaguchi and Nancy Kerrigan are just two of the many, many world-class Olympic ice skaters who will perform today in Skates of Gold at 4 p.m. at Boston Garden.

MONDAY



1 It only took several-million years, but the dinosaurs are finally in Boston. The ferocious velociraptor and the poison-spitting dilophosaurus are just two of the dinosaurs from Jurassic Park at the Museum of Science. It's best to get tickets in advance. Call 723-2500.

TUESDAY

2 She wants to suck your blood … not. But it is true that Anne Rice, author of the Vampire Chronicles, will appear at the Arlington Street Church today at 7 p.m. as part of the Boston Globe Book Festival. She will discuss her newest book, Lasher. Admission is free. Call 929-2649.

WEDNESDAY

3 See a fairy-tale romance tonight at the Wang Center as Boston Ballet stages the classic Sleeping Beauty. Call 931-ARTS, but hurry — the princess will only be slumbering in Boston until Nov. 7.

THURSDAY

4 Indulge in a gala five-course dinner, beginning with champagne, as you learn about matching food with wine. Taught by one of the premier wine experts in the business, this evening of learning at the French Library should be an exquisite dining experience. Tickets are $70; call 266-4351.

FRIDAY

5 The Boston Celtics once again take to the hallowed parquet of Boston Garden in their opening home game against the New York Knicks. Tip-off is at 7:30 p.m. Watch this space for the words "Shawmut Center" in the near future.

SATURDAY

6 With the release of his new album, Billy Joel is packing them in on his national tour. He plays the Worcester Centrum. Call 931-2000.

SUNDAY

7 As part of the Bank of Boston Celebrity Series, the Wynton Marsalis Septet plays at Symphony Hall (301 Mass. Ave., Boston) tonight at 8 p.m. Trumpeter Marsalis, of course, is a world-class jazz musician, and his band is just as talented. Call 266-1492.

MONDAY

8 Do you "vant to be alone?" Fine. Or you can bring a friend to the Brattle Theatre, 40 Brattle St. in Harvard Square, tonight for the last day of the Greta Garbo film series. Call 876-6837.

A TASTE OF RICE: Author Anne Rice reads from her new novel, Lasher, at the Boston Globe Book Festival on Nov. 2.

TUESDAY

9 Nobel Peace Prize-winner, Boston University professor and author Elie Wiesel delivers the second part of his three-lecture series tonight at 7 p.m. at BU's George Sherman Union, 775 Comm. Ave. Wiesel, a Holocaust survivor, only gives these free lectures once each year. See IB's "Calendar" for more details.

MURDER, SHE WROTE: Cambridge writer Susan Kelly hangs out at the Middlesex County Courthouse in preparation for her detective-fiction series.

Susan Kelly
Mystery Woman

By Mark Robinson

"The eyes of a murderer," says Cambridge author Susan Kelly, as jurors — nervous and reticent — file into the cafeteria of the Middlesex County Courthouse, "have a hard, flat shine. Like reflector plates, they shine without depth. Eyes are the windows to the soul, and there's no soul there."

The process of restoring order: for the jurors, perhaps a fretful inconvenience, but for Kelly, it is the drama that entertains readers. To slay the chaotic dragon, to restore order to a violated society was the duty of the literary heroes of yore. Today, although the process has become extremely complicated, it is the call of detectives.

To create authenticity and to find inspiration for her novels, Kelly immerses herself in the criminal-justice system. The Middlesex County Courthouse is one of her favorite places to go, even if it's just for coffee. She sits in on trials, reads police reports, talks to cops about the latest cases, and accompanies them on investigations. Kelly knows her murderers: from the moron who shoots people for parking their mopeds in the wrong spot, to the intelligent and charming Ted Bundys of the world who in their spare time volunteer on suicide hotlines.

"For the morons of the typical two-guys-doing-it-to-each-other variety, this is their way of life" she says. "Everyone is so fed up with revolving-door justice, it's not even a political issue.

"Prison doesn't rehabilitate," she continues, "It teaches them how to be better criminals. The longer the sentence, the longer they're off the streets — that's the ultimate benefit."

All of Susan Kelly's six crime novels are set in Cambridge or as far as her sleuth Liz Connors can travel by bus. "The Boston area is good for murders," she says with enthusiasm, in "New Hampshire, they don't have as many, but when they do, they pull out all the stops."

Kelly's novels are so realistic that some readers might question where Kelly has drawn the line between fiction and reality. But although both Kelly and her heroine are tall, redheads, and crime writers with medieval degrees, the author insists she is an inch shorter.

Susan Kelly, who describes her work as "medieval romance in a modern dress," assures that despite a New York Times article linking writers to madmen and alcoholics, she will continue to write the Liz Connors series. Her book, Out of the Darkness, is due out in paperback shortly, and Kelly reports she is in the final stages of Betrayal, the next in the series. She also will be teaching a class, "Crime, Mystery and Detective Fiction" at the Company of Writers in January.

Alison Amoroso
A Voice of Teen's Own

By Megan Gilmartin

In the basement of an aged building in downtown Boston lives a magazine that provides young women with a place to exfoliate their anxieties and celebrate their triumphs. Teen Voices offers young women an alternative to mainstream teen magazines.

Alison Amoroso, founder of Women Express, the progressive organization that keeps the publication going, started laying the groundwork for the organization in 1988. Disillusioned by the lack of enthusiasm and participation of local women in the women's movement, and disappointed by the less-than-challenging jobs offered to her, Amoroso decided to start a movement of her own. With her master's degree in counseling from Harvard and her extensive experience working with adolescents and their families, Amoroso, along with several colleagues, hatched the idea for Teen Voices.

"I just felt that there was so much that teen-age girls wanted to know — needed to know," Amoroso says.

Amoroso keeps her hand on the pulse of young women's world by letting them choose the outline for each issue. "We don't shape it as much as we let the submissions shape what we do," she says. Unlike most publications, Teen Voices does not have a rigid editorial calendar. "If we get 10 writings about somebody's mother dying from cancer, we'll do a piece on that," adds Amoroso.

Besides publishing the poems, short stories and creative expressions of young women, Amoroso and her team of volunteers tackle the controversial issues that most teen magazines ignore. Teen Voices features articles ranging from birth control to depression to interracial dating. Amoroso also assigns young apprentices to do hard-news articles and interviews with battered women and young, single mothers. "Their words can help other girls. It's a way to get information out and increase a sense of unity for women."

Besides fostering a sense of accomplishment and self-worth in teens, Women Express offers an impressive mentor program in a variety of occupations ranging from accounting and marketing to public speaking and publishing. "We want to help teen-agers grow and think about other people's perspectives," Amoroso says. "We want to be a parent to young minds."

What the future holds for Amoroso and Teen Voices is uncertain. Although "it's hard running a teen program on a shoestring," Amoroso promises that Women Express and Teen Voices will continue to provide young women with access to information, knowledge and power. "A lot of women like being here because they find other women who are like-minded and who care," Amoroso says. "It's a cool place to be."

HORROR

Books, videos & music to terrorize yourself

At Home

The sharp, autumnal scent of bonfires reminds us of two of New England's favorite fall pastimes: picking apples and burning witches. They gave traditional-Boston Halloweens a distinctive feel. Of course, these sorts of hobbies aren't as popular now as they once were. With the spread of the suburbs, it's difficult to find an orchard intact.

This Halloween, it may be wiser to seek our thrills at home.

On those nasty October evenings when northeasters howl in the chimneys like the undead, and sirens scream in the chilly darkness, and the rain pelts the aluminum siding, there's nothing so pleasant as lying curled up inside, frightening oneself goofy within easy reach of the Oreos. It doesn't matter whether it's with the latest paperback thriller, or a video shocker, or even some arcane tome with woodcuts obscene and outré, there's something particularly pleasurable in bringing horror into the home on a ghastly evening. One can lie there, inside, with someone one likes, hands and feet all toasty stretched out in front of a roaring television, and feel comfortable and terrified at the same time. It's a very giddy, enjoyable kind of feeling. It throws people together.

"...It doesn't matter whether it's with the latest paperback thriller, or a video shocker, or even some arcane tome with woodcuts obscene and outré, there's something particularly pleasurable in bringing horror into the home on a ghastly evening..."

Freud called it the unheimlich. We call it a pickup maneuver.

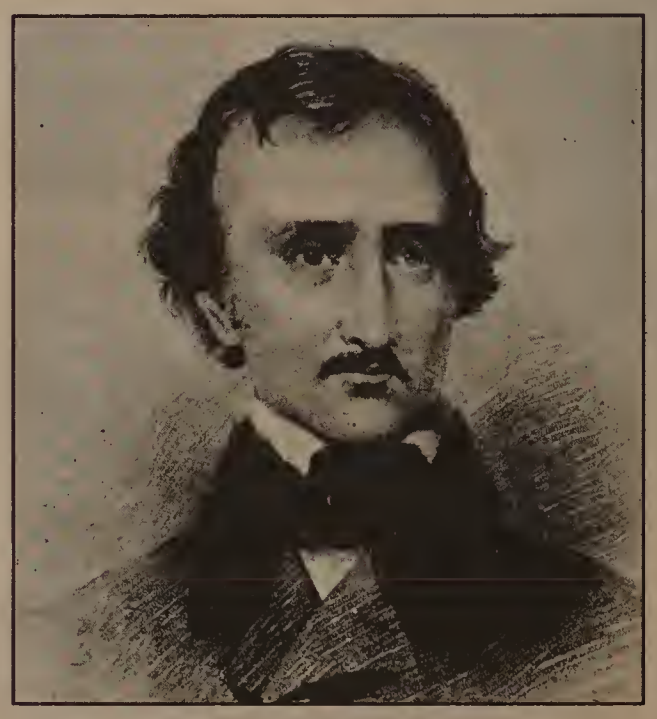
We have some suggestions for those who want to sample some home-style horror this fall. Whether fear is a solitary vice or you're trying to scare the pants off a loved one, here are some tidbits of terror that should darken further those gloomy New England evenings. For once, feel more frightened at home than out on the streets. — M.T. Anderson

Reading yourself scared with Boston horror masters



BOOKS

Something about Boston's forbidding aspect — the cold climate, the colder stares — inspires horror in many. Four of America's greatest Gothic visionaries were local, and they continue to unsettle us on grim New England evenings.

Edgar Allen Poe, the ornate and deranged father of American horror, was born in Boston, although he spent his life moving from Baltimore to Richmond to Philadelphia, fighting neurasthenia and his wife. Some of Poe's stories are set in the New England area; Arthur Gordon Pym, from the adventure yarn of the same name, hies from Nantucket, for example. However, Poe's most famous pieces involve strange foreign locales. His fascination with rotting castles, ancestral homes and weird Oriental panaromas is, paradoxically, peculiarly American.

Poe's short stories are usually collected under the name "Tales of Mystery and Imagination." For Poe, there was a distinction between the two types of tales. The tales of mystery are based on rationality and are meant to be solved, such as "The Murders in the Rue Morgue," in which a detective investigates several repulsive homicides (a victim, infamously, is found jammed in the chimney); the tales of imagination, on the other hand, are hallucinogenic and irrational, based more on nightmare imagery than on coherent or believable plots. These have received more attention: "The Pit and the Pendulum," "The Cask of Amontillado," "The Masque of the Red Death," "The Fall of the House of Usher," and so on. In an age before Freud, Poe already struck on the power of half-glimpsed symbolism and motive; "The Tell-Tale Heart" is a masterpiece of brilliantly observed sadism and neurotic decline. The language of some of the tales may seen ornate to a modern audience, but Poe's lush, hypnotic prose is part of his power. It

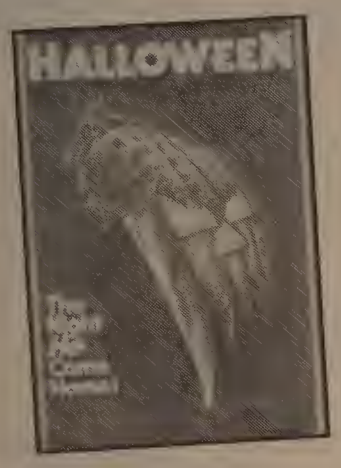
Minireviews by Kaj Wilson

The Haunting, 1963

Starring Julie Harris, Claire Bloom

This chilling adaptation of Shirley Jackson's The Haunting of Hill House, re-released on its 30th anniversary in time for Halloween. An anthropologist and his three assistants search for evidence of the supernatural in Hill House, an 80-year-old mansion with a history of tragedies, and find far more than they bargained for.



Bloodsucking Pharaohs in Pittsburgh

Starring Jake Dengel, Joe Sharkey, Susann Fletcher

Comedic horror movies a la Evil Dead . Someone is murdering the hookers of Pittsburgh in gruesomely imaginative ways (with special effects by horrormeister Tom Savini). It's up to the dregs of the police force — Detective Sweeney and his queasy partner — along with the perky DeeDee Taylor to decipher the hieroglyphic clues.

VIDEOS

Halloween, 1978

Starring Jamie Lee Curtis, P.J. Soles, Nancy Loomis

A classic by director John Carpenter with lots of imitators. About a psychotic killer who — as a child — struck on Halloween. Fifteen years later, will he strike again? Starring Donald Pleasence and Jamie Lee Curtis.

Frankenhooker, 1990

Starring James Lorinz, Patty Mullen, Charlotte Helmkamp

Sick laughs from the makers of Basket Case. Jeffrey Franken is a mad-scientist-in-the-making whose girlfriend is shredded in a freak remote-control lawnmower accident. Armed with the body parts of Times Square prostitutes, Jeff reassembles his fiancee, but she's not quite the same .... Good, gruesome, campy fun, with cameos from Louise Lasser (Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman) and Shirley Stoler (Mrs. Steve in Pee-wee's Playhouse).

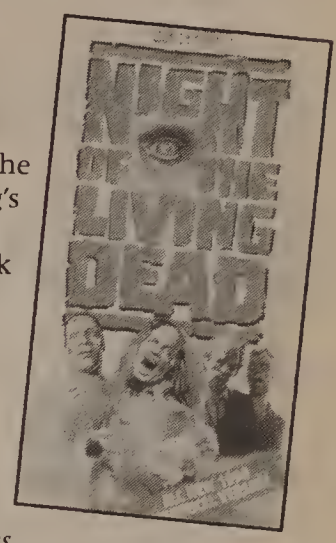
Carnival of Souls, 1962



Starring Candace Hilligloss, Herk Harvey, Francis Feist

A woman is believed to have drowned with her friends when their car plunges off a bridge. When she emerges alive from the river, she is soon haunted by phantoms. Rescued from the drive-in circuit, this cheapie directed by Herk Harvey has become a cult film. Either way you take it — horror film or remarkable psychological study of repression and madness — Carnival of Souls is a chiller. Said to have influenced George Romero's Night of the Living Dead.

The Shining ,1980

Starring Jack Nicholson, Shelley Duvall, Scatman Crothers

This tour de force remains one of the better adaptations of Stephen King's novels. Frustrated-writer Jack Torrance (Nicholson) agrees to look after a remote Colorado hotel for the winter, and the place literally has a life of its own. Who can the tidal wave of blood or Nicholson's scenery-chewing performance as an ax-wielding maniac who stalks his son in the hedge maze?

Night of the Living Dead, 1968

Starring Judith O'Dea, Russell Streiner, Duane Jones

Director George Romero's first feature is another classic. Zombies who feed on human flesh roam the countryside (the film was shot in Pittsburgh). Leonard Maltin's Movie Video Guide warns the reader not to

10 Fright Flicks by Gerald Peary

1. Dead of Night (1948). The British classic about a puppet trying to kill his master, the ventriloquist.
2. Them! (1954). Giant, radiated ants invade the Los Angeles sewer system.
3. Invasion of the Body Snatchers (1956). The spooky original. Fall asleep and have your soul taken away as you turn into a pod.
4. The Horror of Dracula (1958). Christopher Lee as the most sexually charged of the many versions of Bram Stoker's evil vampire.
5. Eyes Without a Face (1959). A murderer kills young women to graft their beautiful faces onto the visage of his scarred daughter. A French surrealist classic.
6. Rosemary's Baby (1968). The devil (not Woody Allen) is after Mia Farrow's unborn child.
7. Don't Look Now (1973). Little people in red raincoats follow Donald Sutherland and Julie Christie in Venice.
8. Halloween (1978). A maniac comes home, slashing his way toward babysitter Jamie Lee Curtis.
9. The Brood (1979). Director David Cronenberg's horrific take on New Age philosophizing.

Grave Sounds by M.T. Anderson

The ancient dance of the dead and demonic continues to fascinate, perhaps because one is so rarely invited. Medieval paintings and crude woodcuts show the unholy Sabbat — bodies writhing, gargoyles grinning — to be repulsive in its ghoulish excess and gorging. Any number of classical favorites depict this harrowing hip-hop from Hell and the resulting loss of control. Here are a few of the most famous.

MUSIC

Saint-Saens's Danse Macabre tops the list, a tone poem depicting the Devil fiddling at midnight while corpses crawl out of their tombs and move swiftly from grave to rave. There's a rather touching moment when, after a night's hectic celebration, the undead hear the cock crow and realize they must return to their crypts and dry-rot. The mid-priced Barenboim recording is a strong performance (DG 415 847-2), and also includes the thunderous "Organ" Symphony (No. 3), guaranteed to move you and clear your sinuses.

Mussorgsky's Night on Bald Mountain is another frequent hit on Sabbat mix tapes, a nightmare vision of dark wings and splintered crags. Popularized by the demonic visuals of Disney's Fantasia, the work still retains its dastardly charm. Mussorgsky's own original orchestration is particularly barbaric (with Abbado, RCA 61354-2), although you might want to hear the piece paired with the famous Pictures at an Exhibition, which also touches on the supernatural (depictions of gloomy catacombs and of the Russian-witch Baba Yaga, whose hut stalks the forest on chicken legs). Both the old Bernstein performance (CBS MYK 36726) and the newer, digital Sinopoli performance (DG 429 785-4) include the two works together in their most well-known orchestrations.

Edvard Grieg's incidental music for Ibsen's Peer Gynt, an exploration of how good things happen to obnoxious people, is famous on several counts. You'll recognize the rhapsodic Morning Mood and — if you are a devotee of Cinnamon Toast Crunch — the wild-dance-piece In the Hall of the Mountain King. The latter picks up an unhealthy momentum as Peer Gynt is swamped and surrounded by hopping trolls and finally overwhelmed. Just listening, one hyperventilates.

Herbert von Karajan's 1973 performance of the Peer Gynt Suites is available at mid-price (DG 423 208-2).

Liszt's Totentanz, another dance of the dead, is based on the medieval "Dies irae" chant, which depicts dolorous goings-on at the end of the world. Once again, death seems anything but restful. Krystian Zimmerman's recording with our very own Boston Symphony Orchestra (Ozawa, DG 423 571-2) is superb and also includes the two robust piano concerti.

And, of course, for the stout of heart, there are Halloween compilation discs that pair works such as these with Wagner's Ride of the Valkyries and so on. These are fun for parties, although the scariest things about them are the marketing executives involved in their production. Fright Night on CBS has a good selection. (CBS MDK 45530).

These should liven up your Walpurgis Night. Just the kind of thing your coven will covet.

makes his setting all the more oppressive, his narrators all the more bizarre.

Bostonian author Henry James, most famous for his contribution to the novel (he made it unreadable), wrote several ripping ghost stories, most of which take place in England. The most famous is "Turn of the Screw," which concerns, depending on how one reads it, either children molested and corrupted by baleful spirits or the mental disintegration of their governess, who insists against reason that her childish charges grow evil. James never reveals whether it's a tale of the supernatural or of the unstably paranoid. It's a masterpiece of creeping confusion and dread.

Edith Wharton, like James, took time out from her society novels (such as the recently paraded Age of Innocence) to write ghost stories. Unlike James, she sets some of her best ones in the New England area: "The Eye" seems almost a portrait of the repressed and world-weary James, taken to paranormal heights. "All Souls" concerns a bedridden invalid who finds her house strangely empty of life on the weekend and gradually learns of an unholy conspiracy. Like Wharton's novels, her ghost stories are finely felt and masterfully crafted.

H.P. Lovecraft: The fiction of the American prince of horror in the '20s's served to show us that our New England dream of ancient, white steeples and rambling forests must also involve isolation and a grim Puritan silence.

Pulp-fiction author H.P. Lovecraft inherited Poe's mantle of the American prince of horror in the twenties. Although he lived most of his life in Providence, his tales center on Massachusetts — on decaying, mythical towns such as Innsmouth, near Newburyport, where shambling fishermen make pacts with dark powers, and on Arkham, home of Miskatonic U., a sort of Ivy League for the damned. Lovecraft, like Poe, favors narrators steeped in arcane lore and decadent poetry. He's fascinated by rotting New England villages and dripping basements.

Bostonians will enjoy familiar references. In "At the Mountains of Madness," about the exploration of an ancient, Antarctic city, a man chased down a corridor by a bubbling beast goes mad and starts screaming at the stops on the Red Line. In "The Dream-Quest of Unknown Kadath," an explorer in the dream world learns that the mystical city he seeks is nothing more than his own infant memories of Beacon Hill. Laconically displaying his latest paintings of ghouls feeding on subway passengers near the North End, artist Richard Pickman says, "You know, there are things that won't do for Newbury Street." Lovecraft never tires of writing tales of old Boston families that hide warped children in their attics, the products of blasphemous acts with apes or bloated gods (In this, he was somewhat misguided; proper Bostonians refuse to mate with anything from as far away as Saugus, let alone Venus.).

Although Lovecraft's science fiction now seems more quaint than awesome 70 years later, his misanthropic horror tales still thrill: "The Shadow Over Innsmouth," "The Whisperer in Darkness" and "The Call of Cthulhu" provide a good introduction to his style and his nihilistic pantheon.

His Weird Tales selections have vastly influenced the modern generation of horror writers. He, more than any other writer, served to show us that our New England dream of ancient, white steeples and rambling forests must also involve isolation and a grim Puritan silence. For this reason, he left the exotic monasteries and castles of earlier gothic writers and brought horror home to our doorstep.

"The true epicure in the terrible, to whom a new thrill of unutterable ghastliness is the chief end and justification of existence, esteems most of all the ancient, lonely farmhouses of backwoods New England ... for there the dark elements of strength, solitude, grotesqueness, and ignorance combine to form the perfection of hideousness."

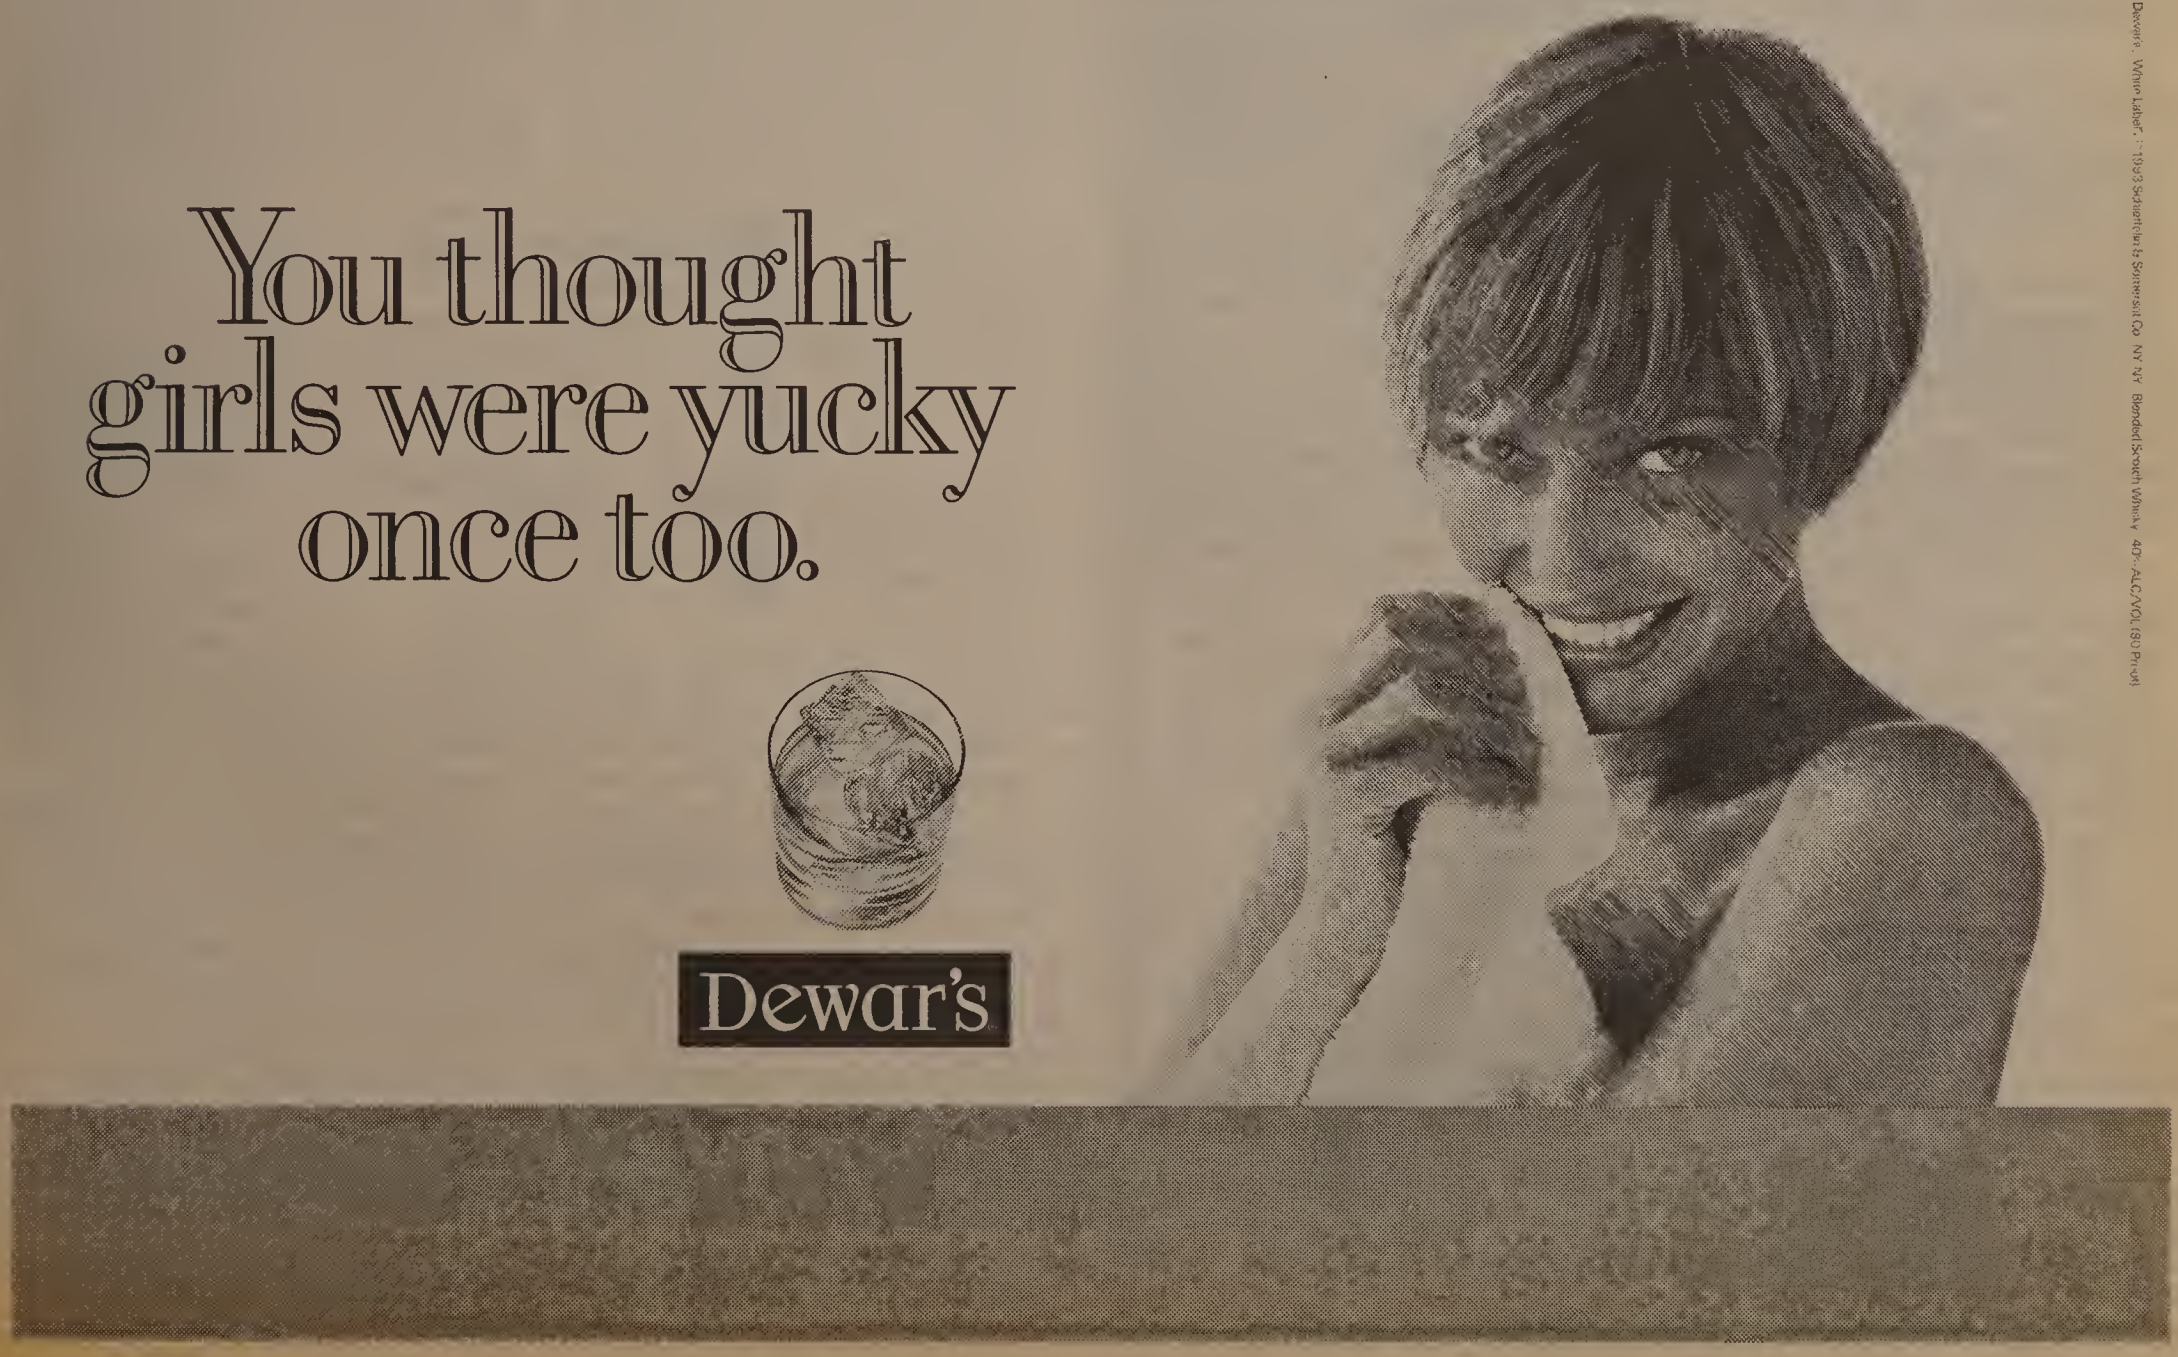
— from Lovecraft's "The Picture in the House"

More scary reading

by Mark Robinson

With the solemn, misty evenings of fall walking the streets of Boston, nothing could be more comforting than burrowing deep into the woolen security of one's bed and reading about the mysterious happenings and ghastly killings of fictitious characters.

The sleuthing adventures of Arthur Conan Doyle's Sherlock Holmes are a staple for late-night reading. For more than 100 years, Holmes's scientific precision of investigation — simple, humble proof of the indomitable abilities of pure reason — coupled with the humanistic sympathies of Dr. Watson have entertained and thrilled readers. Oxford University Press honors the success of Doyle and Holmes (now more real than most historical figures) with a hardbound collection of nine of Doyle's most famous Sherlock investigations, including The Hound of the Baskervilles, The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes and His Last Bow , for the first time printed directly from the manuscript, without any of the formerly made "ruthless revisions" due to its propagandistic slant. The collection, which features insightful introductions on the history of each of the books and detailed explanatory notes throughout the text, should please both the newly introduced and the Sherlock aficionado. But, as we contentedly retire in bed, we should all be thankful for Sherlock Holmes's pervasive, almost destructive, passion to stimulate his mind upon the most "intricate analysis," "obtuse cryptogram" and the baffling,



" . . . as we contentedly retire in bed, we should all be thankful for Sherlock Holmes's pervasive passion to stimulate his mind . . . " so that we may vicariously live through his most captivating exploits.

For thrillers set in New England, let Susan Kelly's sleuth, Liz Connors, a struggling free-lance writer in Cambridge, lead you into the oddest murders in Massachusetts. In Out of the Darkness, soon to be available in paperback, Liz rides the bus to Manchester to investigate the bizarre murders of Catholic girls, whose mutilated bodies, with green ribbons tied around their necks, are left like mannequins decorating the Merrimack River. Susan Kelly lives in Cambridge and expects her next Liz Connors novel to be released in November.

For reading of a different bent than Kelly's realistic settings and adventures, try the twisted imagination of Jane Langton, another Massachusetts writer. Langton has a number of paperbacks available from Penguin. Her stories are set in homey, New England towns. In her The Transcendental Murder, her sleuth, Homer Kelly, discovers letters suggesting that the famous intellectuals of the 19th century were not entirely calmed by the wind blowing through trees and had actually murdered a prominent, local citizen. Emily Dickinson Is Dead , and Murder at the Gardner, set in the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum, are some of her other titles.

Her next book, Divine Inspiration, about an organ player in the Back Bay whose instrument features a single button labeled "divine inspiration," is due for release in November.

THE BEVERLY HILLBILLIES

Although some adjustment is needed for those of y'all who've grown attached to the original cast, the new Clampett family will quickly win you over with their backwoods ways and down-home hospitality. Elly May is a little tougher (she wrestles bears for honey) and Uncle Jed, a little less wise (he gets arrested for breaking into his own house), but Granny's still mixin' her elixir, and there's still a raccoon in the pot. The film is star-packed and very funny. The casting is right on the money — all except for Jim Varney (Uncle Jed) who can't seem to shed his Ernest image.

A BRONX TALE

A solid, engaging work by first-time director Robert De Niro and playwright-screenwriter Chazz Palminteri about a boy who is torn between his love for two men: his decent, working-class father (De Niro) and flashy, neighborhood-goodfella Sonny (Palminteri). What keeps The Bronx Tale from being a straightforward morality tale is the fact that the "fathers" aren't so dissimilar: in their fashion, both are honorable men. Francis Capra as the young son is smart, impressionable, and a wise guy — there's no question why he finds Sonny so appealing. Lillo Brancato as the teen-age son is not as convincing. He's sweet, too sweet; there's no question he'd rather be loved than feared.

The year is 2032 in San Angeles, the site of old Los Angeles, a city ruled by drugs and crime in the 1990s. San Angeles has laws against everything unhealthy — alcohol, smoking, sex — in fact, humans rarely even touch each other. When '90s rival-cop-and-criminal-duo John Spartan (Sylvester Stallone) and Simon Phoenix (a peroxided Wesley Snipes) are defrosted three decades later, they continue their war in the now-peaceful city. Demolition Man is a predicatable macho-action flick, but it has its funny moments, such as when Spartan's 21st-century girlfriend mixes up her '90s curses. "Shovel it," she says.

C.L. Donchess

A gritty, steamy, down-and-out version of The Wonder Years. The film's hero, Aaron (Jesse Bradford), does more than blush at giggling, pubescent girls in the school cafeteria; he also deals with the harsh, sordid life of St. Louis during the Depression. Prostitution, eviction notices, Hoovervilles and suicide are just some of the realities that force Aaron into premature manhood. Each scene brings us to new depths of discomfort (and horror), but still we want more. As ordinary brush strokes can result in a classic painting, so the vulgarity of each scene gives this film a unique beauty. The excellent casting includes Elizabeth McGovern as the hotel prostitute and Karen Allen as the kindhearted teacher.

Good campy fun, although it is apparently meant to be a serious thriller. Taken at face value, the film is utterly ridiculous in all dimensions: plot, direction, acting, and most of all, writing. The marriage of a Yuppie college-town couple, played by Bill Pullman and Nicole Kidman, becomes strained after the new hot-shot doctor in town (Alec Baldwin) rents a room in their house. When Baldwin botches an operation on Kidman, she takes the huge settlement and leaves the dazed Pullman, who decides to track her down and discovers things aren't quite what they seem. Adding to the mess is a tossed-off subplot of a serial killer on campus. The best line belongs to the ultra-confident Baldwin: "I am God." Lots of shots of Smith College and Boston.

J.W. Hall

MR. JONES

Can you imagine Nurse Ratchet in One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest falling in love with Jack Nicholson? Actually, Mr. Jones is closer to the silliness of romantic thrillers such as Final Analysis in its taboo-breaking romance between psychiatrist and patient, in this case Lena Olin and Richard Gere, as a very manic patient. A lot of potentially gripping material in the vein of "Is he a genius or is he crazy?" is lost in Hollywood's demand for romance, which takes forever to occur. In the meantime, Gere strains to be Mr. Charisma and Olin doesn't seem to have a clue as to her character (nor do we). Poorly directed by Mike Figgis, with one awkward scene after another and a horribly weak ending.

J.W. Hall

MR.WONDERFUL

Just try to resist the charm and chemistry of Matt Dillon and Annabella Sciorra (is she not the most lovable of today's girl-next-door actresses? What a smile!). It's quite impossible, even if they're placed in a romantic comedy that's as predictable as the alimony payments that irk Dillon. He can't stand forking over his electrical-worker wages to his ex-wife, Sciorra, who ditched him when she decided to go to college. He decides to resolve his anger by finding her a new husband, "Mr. Wonderful." You haven't seen enough movies if you don't know the ending (the film pleads for the "date movie" tag line). Still, director Anthony Minghella gets terrific performances out of his leads and Dillon's frustrated girlfriend, touchingly played by Mary Louise Parker.

J.W. Hall

ROAD SCHOLAR

Rumanian-born poet Andrei Codrescu drives cross-country to explore the spirituality and materialism of the United States. His investigative-style documentary, which visits at least a dozen communities, poses the question: How many of us are really free? A more pertinent question is: Are we really this weird? Codrescu contrasts New York City's homeless and wealthy; he laments abandoned Motown and Henry Ford's original car plant (now defunct); he deals a hand with professional Las Vegas gamblers; and he pokes fun at crystal healers in Santa Fe. What begins as a guilt trip for American capitalists turns into a freewheeling "things that make you go hmmm ...."

There's a moment that best captures True Romance's spirit: Patricia Arquette picks up the top of the toilet tank and slams it over her attacker's head. In a just world, someone would do the same to the makers of this movie. In Detroit, Christian Slater and Arquette meet grungy-cute, fall in love, marry and then head for L.A. with a suitcase full of cocaine stolen from the Mob. The movie offers a fast-forward romance; mucho macho posturing and gut-wrenching violence that screenwriter Quentin Tarantino takes to its Reservoir Dogs-like logical, absurd conclusion. There are puke, my-name-is-Dick and toilet jokes galore; endless pop-culture references; and dialogue that sounds like bad Mamet. True Romance is all smart-ass attitude; it thinks it is sooo cool.

SCARY CHRISTMAS

"... If Santa Claus and his ho, ho, ho get on your nerves ... you'll be delighted with the dark turn Christmas takes in Nightmare ..."

If you don't know and don't care what a sugarplum is, if Santa and his ho, ho, ho get on your nerves, if only eggnog and rum balls can make the season jolly, you'll be delighted with the dark turn Cristmas takes in Nightmare Before Christmas. But there's much more to Nightmare than wrecking the halls. Using state-of-the-art, stop-motion animation techniques, creator-and-producer Tim Burton, director Henry Selick, and composer Danny Elfman have created a macabre musical that sweeps you away in a dizzying rush of images and song.

Jack Skellington (the speaking voice of Chris Sarandon, the singing voice of Danny Elfman) is the beloved Pumpkin King of Halloweentown. Jack is a long, thin, elegant creature who looks like a skeleton crossed with a daddy longlegs. He moves like Fred Astaire and has the nobility and gravity of a classical-stage actor. Every year he brings the "real world" a bigger, better and scarier Halloween. But he's bored; his life seems empty. When Jack accidentally tumbles down a hole into Christmastown, he's enchanted by this red-and-white world that's frosty, merry and bright, and he becomes obsessed with the idea of taking over Christmas. Jack is a noble creature (his imperialist tendencies notwithstanding); his is a magnificent obsession.

Jack's kingdom is appropriately dark and eerie, a world of bold, swirling, twisted, highly textured shapes. Both Dr. Seuss and Dr. Caligari would feel right at home. (The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari is a 1919 German Expressionistic film in which the viewer sees through the eyes of madman Caligari). Other artistic influences include Edward Gorey, Charles Addams, Ronald Searle and even Vincent van Gogh. But not Walt Disney. According to the program notes, right-handed assistant art director Kelly Asbury, a 10-year veteran of Disney's feature-animation department, had to switch to his left hand to "de-Disneyfy" his drawing style.

Burton insisted on a Halloweentown palette of black, white, gray, yellow and, if absolutely necessary, a little bit of orange. As a result, whenever a bright color appears, it jumps out at you, as does the glowing, lime-green toxic slime pouring out of a dragon-head fountain (art director Deane Taylor talked Burton into using green). Oogie Boogie (Ken Page) is literally the best source of local color. Not only is he the meanest creature in Halloweentown, his lair, modeled on a Las Vegas casino, glows in bright neon colors.

The takeover is great fun because of the Halloween spin that Jack and his subjects put on Christmas. They can't help it. Nobody knows a thing about Christmas except Jack, and what he does know has been gleaned from books, mathematical formulas, and dissected teddy bears. Carols sound like dirges, presents are wrapped in gray spider-web paper and black ribbon, toys have sharp teeth, and Santa's sleigh is a coffin pulled by reindeer skeletons and led by Zero, the red-nosed ghost dog. Nightmare beautifully illustrates how a society's frame of reference literally and figuratively colors its perception of, and interaction with, the world.

Jack may be the star, but he has formidable competition from Oogie and an assortment of marvelous creatures. Then there's Sally (Catherine O'Hara). A lovely cross between Frankenstein and a rag doll, she's the creation of the Evil Scientist (William Hickey), an nasty-looking duck. Sally refuses to stay at home and cater to her master. She knocks him out and runs around town trailing her love, Jack. Not only is she the moral center of the film, she's by far the most active and resourceful creature in Halloweentown. This is a female who really knows how to use her body to get what she wants. ❑

A Holy Mess

"...Household Saints... is Savoca's most ambitious and unorthodox film. Unfortunately, it's also her messiest and least realized..."

With True Love (1989) and Dogfight (1990), insightful tales of boy-girl love gone afoul because the boy can't resist the retrograde pleasures of his dumb guy pals, Nancy Savoca could lay claim to the title as America's most interesting contemporary woman filmmaker (not that there's a contest). Household Saints, her third feature, based on a novel by Francine Prose, is Savoca's most ambitious and unorthodox film. Unfortunately, it's also her messiest and least realized.

Savoca's movie is a valiant attempt to make sense out of Catholic faith and religious fervor within today's totally secular world. Is there a place anymore for the True Believer, outside of the gothic South or grotesque, "Send in your dollars!," religious TV? The "saint" of the title is Teresa (Lili Taylor), an extremely serious and intellectual Catholic college student who goes deeper and deeper into her intense faith. She withdraws from the world. One day, across the room, she sees a beaming Jesus Christ. With a New Age smile and a British accent.

Unfortunately, Savoca's movie digs through tiresome flashbacks and several generations of a New York Italian-American family to arrive, at long last, at Teresa's intriguing story. The script repeats itself, and there's a woeful bit of miscasting: Tracey Ullman as Teresa's Italian-American mother. But Judith Malina is great as the shrewish, food-obsessed mother-in-law, and Lili Taylor is genuinely radiant as the almost-beatified Teresa. Look closely, you can almost see a halo.

At a press conference at September's Toronto Festival of festivals, Savoca explained her interest in making Household Saints: "I'm a lapsed Catholic who doesn't stop thinking about it. It wasn't hip anymore to be religious when I got to college, and I was embarrassed about it. Making the movie, I found out a bunch of stuff about myself, which is great, because it's all still with me, and the questions are still there."

But Savoca admitted to worries that a blatantly religious film could sell to the public. "We haven't gotten to the point that financiers believe people want to see such films. When you say 'God,' everyone thinks you mean born-again fundamentalists. Nobody wants to talk about it."

Films with spiritual dimensions have done OK in the American art-house market, as long as they are Swedish (Bergman films), French (Bresson's oeuvre), or Japanese (Woman in the Dunes, etc.). But an American film that takes Catholic doctrine seriously, without Scorsese's sex and violence? Alfred Hitchcock's biggest flop was The Wrong Man, his Catholic masterwork.

The Wedding Banquet

At the Berlin Film Festival, I walked out of The Wedding Banquet in the middle, annoyed by the amateurish male leads (Winston Chao and Mitchell Lichtenstein) and the sitcom-mercialism of the story: a gay Chinese-American yuppie living in New York is about to be visited by his straight Taiwanese parents, so he fixes himself up with a pretend fiancee. Yes, it's rehabbed La Cage Aux Folles, that toothless cross-dressing farce sucked up by mainstream audiences.

Since then, enough people I respect have expressed admiration for The Wedding Banquet to shame me into seeing it to the end. Well, the film does get better as it goes along, because the Taiwanese parents, arrived in America, prove genuine and affecting. And the long banquet is nice to watch, if only for all the young Chinese-Americans who have a ball appearing on screen as wedding guests.

A step forward: Chinese-American audiences, who are flocking to this film, are for the first time being absorbed by a story in which the main character is homosexual. Guys kiss on screen. Two steps back: (1) the parents in the film accept their son's gayness only because his new wife is giving birth to a child, so he's not that gay. And (2) The Wedding Banquet comes off eerily pro-life. An abortion is averted and that's a "happy ending." ❑

The Draw of Money

"... If art is all about money, then can money be art? ..."

If art, like everything else, is just a commodity, then art is all about money. If art is all about money, then, can money be art? According to the Institute of Contemporary Art's new show, the answer is "yes." Among the show's witty money-related pieces are photocopies of actual currency.

Commodity Image is one of two exhibits opening recently at the ICA. Both offer a rich feast of images and objects, full of visual information and concepts to make us think about social phenomena and crisis in provocative ways. Organized by the International Center of Photography in New York and sponsored by Phillip Morris Cos. Inc., Commodity Image explores tough questions about how advertising, Hollywood, corporations and the media use art and photography as a way to promote an image or product and result in sales. The second exhibit, Day Without Art includes visual and media art by Boston-area artists who are examining issues of HIV status and living with AIDS or who have died of AIDS. The show focuses on an annual, national event at museums and galleries that promotes an awareness of the ongoing loss to the arts caused by AIDS. Performance and gallery discussion with artists takes place on Dec. I, World AIDS Day. Both exhibits are on view through Jan. 2, I994.

The shows represent ongoing aspects of the agenda of the ICA's current director, Milena Kalinovska. As represented by the diversity of the cutting-edge work included in Commodity Image, Kalinovska is committed to exploring new ideas and issues in the arts, as well as an ongoing dialogue with Boston artists and specific concerns of its community, including AIDS, gender and multiculturism.

Viewers of Commodity Image will delight in finding old friends and icons of contemporary art: From the most famous photograph of the 20th century, Ansel Adams' Moonrise, Hernandez, New Mexico, (I94I) to erotic nudes of Madonna by Steven Meisel from the coffee-table book, Sex, as well as strong works by unfamiliar artists. Similarly, in the AIDS-related show, viewers can poignantly re-encounter work by now-deceased artists, including Ted Spagna's memorable sleep studies and the poetic creations of Mark Morrisroe.

From automobiles to fashion to entertainment, getting the right look is crucial to market share in these highly competitive, multibillion-dollar industries. On American TV, for example, commercials and MTV video clips seem more creative than the actual programs. Similarly, thumbing through fashion-and-art magazines, the ads routinely upstage the editorial pages. As ads get more artistic (The Gap, Guess?, Armani), the edges between art and commerce become hopelessly blurred, as this ICA show abundantly and relentlessly demonstrates.

GOLDEN RULE: Sarah Charlesworth's Gold, 1986

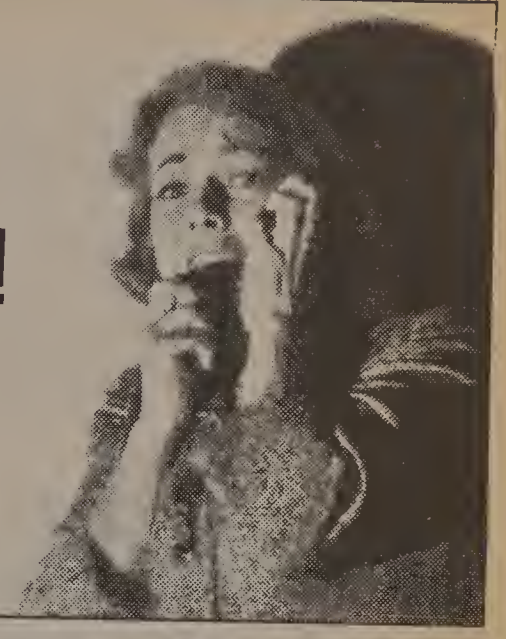
The fashion industry and corporations pour zillions into photographers, art directors, supermodels, and celebrities to achieve the right look for a perfume, cosmetic or clothing line. But what to make of a series of images from the United Colors of Benetton print ads that features news-style color photographs of disasters and conflicts? Here, news photography becomes advertising imagery, which ends up on the walls of an art museum. So go figure.

Is a fashion photographer, who works for commercial clients, also an artist? This is a question being asked by the art world, at the news that David Ross, former ICA director, is planning a retrospective on fashion-photographer Richard Avedon. Ross, who organized a big Avedon show for the ICA, is planning another for the Whitney Museum of American Art, where he is currently director.

And, a final question: If advertising and the media can steal from artists with impunity, is turnabout fair play? Again, the answer in this provocative and clever exhibition is a hilarious "yes."



Alan Belcher has laminated a designer perfume bottle to a skunk pelt while Barbara Kruger, who has built a career undermining and rearranging advertising-and-marketing images and text, exhibits covers she designed for The New Republic, Esquire, Ms. and Newsweek. Once just magazines, now they are art. Unbelievable. ❑

GRAPE EXPECTATIONS

"... Too few of our domestic winemakers work in a world context today. As a result many of our wines taste as though they were made by formula ..."

When I first visited some of Europe's classic wine districts, I recall being surprised, perhaps naively, at the composition of the restaurants' wine lists. The top hostelry in Chateauneuf du Pape at that time offered patrons literally dozens of selections from that appellation in the most important vintages since the 1920s — and nothing else. When in Burgundy, I learned, it was not a propos to whisper the virtues of Bordeaux. The most renowned viticultural regions, it seemed, betrayed more than partisanship but an extreme jealousy of rivals. Even today, if we examine what is reputed to be the finest and certainly one of the thickest wine lists in the state of Oregon, we may discover hundreds of classic choices but not a single selection from neighboring California.

Restaurateurs, who are usually businessmen first, politicians second and artistes somewhat further down the list, may be excused for their local patriotism. It strikes me as somewhat absurd, though, how some winemakers, who after all are commissioned to produce the finest expression of the grape, never even taste the classics. One assumes that an American making Chardonnay would have at least a professional interest in sniffing a glass of Meursault now and again. Several winemakers I have spoken to admit, quite ingenuously, that they taste wine with regularity but never white Burgundy.

There are historical explanations for this parochialism, chief among which is the wild expansion in domestic fine-wine production during the last 20 years. In 1973 California produced 87 Chardonnays; today it makes close to 500. All of the wineries that arose overnight had to find winemakers. In most cases, they snapped up recent graduates of oenology programs, which focused on processing sound, healthy fruit and making clean, salable wine rather than comparative tasting. Inexperienced as they were, many of these winemakers fell back on the best resource they possessed: technical know-how. They made safe, flawless wines. Others, however, set out to educate their palates, in some cases by working abroad. In effect, they wanted to further their education by adapting a wider range of practices to the local conditions.

Too few of our domestic winemakers work in a world context today. As a result many of our wines, emanating from successful, even prestigious, companies, lack essential aroma and flavor. They may be smooth, glossy and handsome, but their personalities exude dullness. They taste as though they were made by formula.

A recent blind tasting I attended at Sonoma County's Chalk Hill Winery established this point quite vividly. Winemaker David Ramey, whose background included stints in Australia and Bordeaux (where he worked two vintages at Chateau Petrus) as well as at Simi and Matanzas Creek, had assembled some of the market's most commercially celebrated Sauvignon Blancs to taste against his just-released 1992 offering. At Chalk Hill only since 1990, Ramey has evolved a unique style for the varietal, which features 100-percent-natural yeast fermentation in oak barrels, full malolactic conversion, and extended aging on the lees in small cooperage. The result is a blazingly bold wine with aromatic flashes of bay leaf, smoke, and white pepper and a thick butterscotch-like texture. This is as distinctive and delicious an expression of the grape in its local incarnation as one can imagine. At the tasting, it bore little resemblance to the stripped, minimalist Sauvignons offered by its Californian neighbors, although a lusciously spicy white Graves (Ch. La Louviere) and pungent Pouilly Fume from Didier Dagueneau provided delightful contrast.

To say though that Ramey's wine swamped the local competition is an understatement. In the calm anonymity of a blind tasting, with ample opportunity to focus on quality rather than labels, the verdict among the 11 tasters present was close to unanimous. Comparing these Sauvignons, it was not difficult to taste that a few were produced by people whose understanding gave them the confidence to make wines with something to express, while most strove mightily to suppress the grape's outspoken personality. Despite their marketing savvy, the latter wineries produced Sauvignons that were slick, polished and forgettable, if not inexpensive.

It is heartening to note that, given the chance, even inexperienced tasters can recognize the difference. ❑

Catch a Wave

"... The appetizers were good and well-prepared, but it was with the rotisserie entrees that the Blue Wave really hit its stride ..."

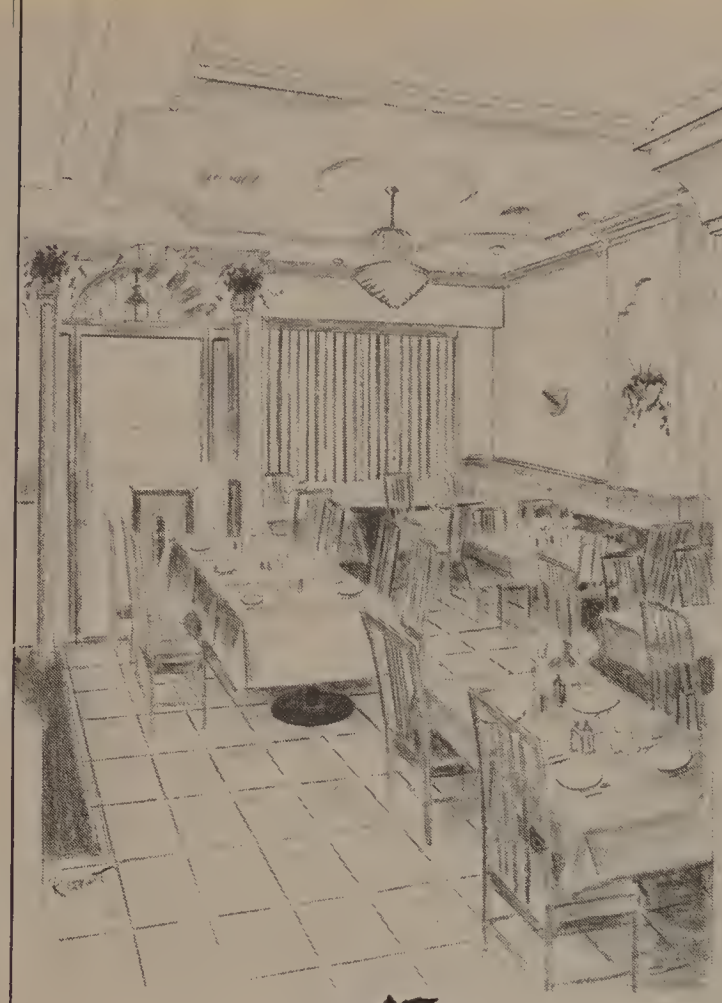
On the corner of Berkeley and Columbus in the South End, Bostonians can go catch a wave, California-style, at the Blue Wave. On a chilly October evening, our party was seated by the friendly host, clad in shorts. The large, airy dining room was filled with the noise of the crowd, and along with the music, the decibel level rose to a roar. After a moment of panic, the sight of the patrons enjoying their meals reassured us that there is more to the establishment than loud music and good times. Before settling in with the menu, our attention turned to the sights: the white walls are covered with vibrantly colored works of art and each glass table sits atop a box filled with an eclectic assemblage — our table contained items saluting the musical Miss Saigon.

The extensive menu, created by chef/owner Russ Berger, is based on a healthy, West Coast-style of cuisine and features rotisserie items, grilled foods, salads and sandwiches. The wine list offers a selection of moderately priced, mostly California wines, including several organic ones. Our order was taken by a waiter in jeans and a T-shirt, who was experienced and professional but not as outgoing and friendly as one would expect in such an informal setting.

For appetizers, we chose the scallion polenta grilled with Portabello mushrooms ($5.95), and fried lobster-and-ricotta cheese raviolis ($6.95). After only a short wait, they appeared: The first: twin golden discs of polenta were paired with a grilled Portabello mushroom and a moist andouille sausage. A ribbon of mustard-tarragon sauce completed the dish. The polenta had a hearty texture and the mustard sauce was a delicious complement to the sausage. The bowl of mussels was tender and had a touch of heat with a coating of tomato salsa and spicy red-pepper sauce. The fried lobster raviolis looked more like fried wontons than raviolis, but they were hot, crispy and tasty with their yogurt sauce. The appetizers were good and well-prepared, but it was with the rotisserie entrees that the restaurant really hit its stride.

With so many entrees it was difficult to choose, but we settled for the penne pasta with scallops, prosciutto, and sun-dried tomatoes ($10.95); rotisserie chicken rubbed with chopped garlic, roasted jalapeño, and balsamic vinegar ($7.95); and rotisserie duck with an apricot jerk rub ($12.95). Arriving very hot, the penne pasta was al dente and had a nice taste. The accompanying sauce was filled with tender, correctly cooked scallops, prosciutto and red peppers and topped with crisp broccoli and mozzarella cheese. The ingredients were delicious, but as a whole, the dish did not come together; it needed more sauce.

The rotisserie chicken came with a mound of crisp, homemade curly french fries and a peppery jicama-chayote coleslaw. The chicken was perfectly done, plump and tender, with a hint of garlic. A tongue-numbing roasted jalapeño pepper topped the dish. The duck was also perfect, with its dark, chestnut-brown skin and tender, juicy meat. The mango-raisin chutney that covered the duck was wonderful, a perfect complement. The wedges of sweet potato and slices of grilled zucchini and summer squash that accompanied the dish were also delicious. The restaurant definitely knows how to grill and rotisserie.



We decided to order a sampling of desserts because they were homemade and sometimes a meal just doesn't feel complete without them. Our first choice, gingerbread cake with hot-brandied apples, was sold out, as was the second choice, the chocolate paté. Regretfully, we ordered the apple-blackberry pie ($4.50) and the white-chocolate-pecan-brownie pie ($3.95). They were both not to our liking. The apple-blackberry pie had a slightly interesting brown-sugar topping, but the apples were a little underdone and a lot under-spiced and -sweetened. The layer of blackberries added little to the flavor of the dessert. The white-chocolate-pecan-brownie pie is an interesting idea but the pie itself had none of the moistness and richness of a brownie; its texture was that of a muffin. Both desserts were left unfinished.

As the evening came to a close, the consensus was that the ambience was lively and loud (a little too), the food and service good, and the rotisserie items exceptional. All agreed that the Blue Wave is the type of place where one could eat several times a week, trying different dishes, and have a reasonably priced meal. We certainly would, if only they would save us a piece of the gingerbread cake. ❑

Iceland is surrounded by endless miles of seething ocean. It is pummeled by Arctic winds and perilous storms. Its latitude and longitude converge in as desolate a place as any on the planet. And while no one can say for certain what could have possessed the Vikings to come to this place we call Iceland over a hundred centuries ago, we do know what they found once they got here.

The Vikings braved 50-foot seas, gale winds and sea monsters to discover our water. Surely you can manage a trip to the corner market.

A valley. A mountain. And a spring surging up from a place deep beneath the surface of the earth. Forcing its way upward, through ice, solidified layers of lava, and rock. Until, finally, it burst through into the sunlight. A water of such improbable purity, there are those among us who, even now, fervently believe that it surely must have sprung up from the very gods themselves.

The same Icelandic spring of life that continues to flow as clean and clear now as it has since the Ice Age. Indeed, from the very beginning of time itself. Thousands upon thousands of miles from anywhere. Untainted. Untouched. Unspoiled by civilization.

We call it Akva. A spring water unlike any other on earth. And if we seem a bit confident in this, rest assured it is not without good reason.

No other spring water, after all, comes from a place so completely and utterly removed from the compromising influences of civilization. To put it mildly, Iceland is as far off the beaten path as any place on earth.

As a result, our Akva spring water is remarkably soft. Clear. Without so much as a trace of sodium or other impurities. We hope you will try Akva.

You will find that it's available now on the shelves of your favorite corner market or delicatessen.

We know the Vikings had an almost insatiable thirst for adventure. Perhaps now we know how they quenched it.

Akva spring water. The pure soul of Iceland.™

DAILY CATCH RESTAURANTS

323 Hanover St., North End, Boston, 523-8567.

\215 Elm St., Davis Square, Somerville, 623-0375.

261 Northern Ave., Boston's Fish District, 338-3093. 441 Harvard St., Brookline 734-5696.

This original 20-year-old Sicilian-style seafood & pasta restaurant is best known for its specialty-classic calamari. The menu is based on traditional Sicilian recipes— synonymous with healthy eating. "For those of us who suffer from a dear addiction to shellfish and squid, the existence of the Daily Catch has been a source of comfort for many years." Robert Levey, The Boston Globe, December 1989.

DAVIO'S

269 Newbury St., 262-4810. Royal Sonesta Hotel, 5 Cambridge Parkway, Cambridge, 661-4810; 202 Washington Street, Brookline Village, 738-4810.

DICK'S LAST RESORT

55 Huntington Ave., Boston, MA 02199. 267-8080. Open 11am - 2am Mon. thru Sat. 10am - 2am Sun. Free parking after 5pm.

A restaurant (of sorts), Dick's has the kind of food that is not particularly fashionable and definitely not spa cuisine–buckets of messy ribs, chicken, catfish, shrimp, lobster and crab legs–served on butcher paper. There are also 74 kinds of beer for the novice or serious sudsman. Dick's has obnoxious live Classic Rock, Rhythm & Blues and Dixieland Jazz seven nights a week, no cover charge, no dress code and certainly no class. On Sunday, Dick got religion and hired some Gospel Singers at a surprisingly good brunch from 10am to 3pm. A buffet full of goodies such as salads, hot entrées, omelet station, waffles, desserts and make-your-own sundae station. Dick's Last Resort is billed as "The Shame of Boston's Back Bay" and an embarrassment to any neighborhood. Dick says, "Although the food is good and there's plenty of it, places with great food are a dime a dozen." It's the restaurant's style (or lack of it), loud music, wisecracking service people, bullyish doormen, and insulting promotional attitudes that raises eyebrows. Major credit cards accepted – Dick loves cash.

Robert builds up Maison; service survey; Cafe Suisse menu is game for the wild

On the Table

The Roberts have started renovations of Maison Robert. However, things are still busy in the kitchen with a new bar menu and a new fixed-price menu, which includes such favorites as the fillet of sole and the boneless rabbit with polenta. A vegetarian dish, peppers-and-zucchini lasagna, has also been added. The fixed-price dinners are $15; $22 per person for a three-course meal. Maurizio's in the North End has a new special, grilled veal chops stuffed with roasted peppers and provolone in a Madeira sauce. And, we submit a correction to the review of Maurizio's in the last issue: Linda makes the tiramisu, not Maurizio. Enzo's Ristorante in Brookline is also introducing something new: homemade ravioli stuffed with grilled eggplant in a light gorgonzola sauce.

The Lenox Hotel has a new executive chef, David Schmidt. Giacomo's of the North End will soon open a second location on Columbus Avenue. The San Francisco Noodle Company is coming to Boston with a spot on Commonwealth Avenue. Look out Newbury Street, Starbuck's is coming!

Service With a Smile

Several weeks ago, we were on WBZ with Tom Cuddy, talking about waitstaff and service in restaurants. The following week, a listener sent us information on a survey conducted by MasterCard that examined restaurant patrons' attitudes on service in restaurants. Since service is one of our favorite subjects, we wanted to let readers know about it.

Why is service important? According to the survey, service is important in the selection of a restaurant. Of the top-10 reasons why survey respondents would select one restaurant over another, six had to do with service, three with food, and one with value. The aspects of service listed as most important were: having a friendly and well-trained waitstaff, quick service, having orders filled correctly, and the correction of any mistakes.

If the respondents had a positive experience, the survey showed that they would tell an average of six people and return to the restaurant an average of four times. If the experience was negative, the respondents would tell an average of five people and three out of four would never return to give the restaurant a second chance.

Everyone has a pet peeve about service and the individuals surveyed were no exception. The most common one had to do with reservations — reservations being lost entirely or a table not ready at the reserved time. A couple of the most annoying things a waitperson could do were being unfamiliar with the menu and reciting specials aloud. When there was a problem, most of the restaurateurs surveyed hoped that the problem would be reported directly to the management. However, only one in five surveyed restaurant patrons said they would actually do so. The most common response to poor service was simply to reduce the tip.

The goal of the survey is to help restaurants improve service. MasterCard also offers seminars on the subject. Call (800) 677-2926. If you have a story or pet peeve, please let us know, we would like to hear about it. Write to "Appeteasers," c/o The Improper Bostonian, 17 Station St., Suite 7A, Brookline, MA 02146.

Game Plan

Not since the Marquis de Lafayette restaurant has there been such inspired food in downtown Boston. The Swissôtel's new executive chef, Christopher Moos, has created a menu for a wild-game festival at the Cafe Suisse from Oct. 26 through Nov. 24. At a preview tasting last week, all the dishes were found to be wonderful. The entrees include roast pheasant, venison pot pie, buffalo pot roast, stuffed wild-turkey breast, and wild-mushroom strudel. Food like this will certainly put the Swissôtel back on the culinary map.

Next issue: What new restaurant will bring shame to Boston's Back Bay? ❑

Hemingway would have loved us.

Hemingway used to hang out at the Floridita in Cuba. That was before our time of course, but we feel sure if he came back and found himself in Boston, he'd head straight for our restaurant.

Where else in Boston can you find authentic Cuban food such as camarones enchilados, roast pork, ropa vieja and pescado a la marinara. Just to name a few.

And now to compliment your dining experience a new wine list ia available as well as Sangria and Spanish coffees prepared at your table.

About Last Night. . . Lauren Dare AKA The Last Call Lady

Top 10 Reasons Not to Go Out

"... Maybe I'm just experiencing some sort of mid-20s crisis, but right now my couch is much more attractive to me than anyone I've seen at a bar lately..."

I know what you're thinking: Lauren Dare, not go out? What an outrageous thought. But yes, even I, denizen of the night and habitué of the Boston scene, need to rest sometimes. But why, you ask politely, with a hint of disbelief, would anyone want to stay in when they can escape the confines of the domestic abode? After all, home offers such tried-and-true familiar favorites as dirty dishes, roommates squabbling over who took out the trash last time and what movie to watch on Pay Per View, and the possibility of a call from your mother with her litany of woes. Going out offers anything but the above, and in general, that seems like a good thing.

However, there comes a moment in every girl's (excuse me, woman's) life when she has to sit down and re-evaluate her priorities. And sometimes, dragging your dressed-up sorry self to another crowded nightspot full of people who definitely are not members of MENSA and who possess all the social graces and skills of trained circus weasels seems a bit lacking in charm, a bit worn, if you will. Maybe I'm just experiencing some sort of mid-20s crisis, but right now my couch is much more attractive to me than anyone I've seen at a bar lately, and the TV — insipid, uncultured, unenlightened company that it may be — can at least be shut off with the push of a button, which is more than you can say for most people.

So I put on my footy pajamas, surgically attached the remote control to my hand, and surrounded myself with munchies while I came up with reasons to justify not going anywhere this week.

Number 10: Domino's Delivers. Actually, I have discovered that in modern America, you can get just about anything you want delivered, right to your doorstep, even a date for the evening, but I'm holding off on that one for a while because it sounds a little sketchy to me.

Number Nine: There's a possibility that John-John Kennedy might become single again, and I'm on strike until I know one way or the other.

Number Eight: Same old scene, same old scene, same old... oops, sorry, I was dozing off there for a second.

Number Seven: Recovering from a week of dizzy partying following my birthday. (No, I won't tell you how old I am!)

Number Six: I opened my closet, and I have Nothing To Wear.

Number Five: I'm either trying to get closer to God by watching as many televangelists as possible, or determine whether or not televangelists are actually the first wave of an alien takeover.

Number Four: Vodka and tonic at home tastes as good as vodka and tonic at a bar, and I make my drinks stronger.

Number Three: I don't have to worry about passing out and not making it home because, hey!, I'm already there.

Number Two: I'm just getting much too mature for all this going-out nonsense.

Number One: Mystery Science Theater 3000.

There they are. I've been sitting on the couch for a week, and this is all I could come up with for excuses. Call it laziness or lack of motivation if you will. Call it another pathetic example of a couch potato trying to justify her complete immobility for an entire week. Call it cable brainwashing. Call me anything, but just don't call me until next week, when I work up the energy to go back out into the scene. Until then, come on over, there's still room on the couch. ❑

Buffalo Stampede

"...With Big Red Letter Day, Buffalo Tom's fourth album, the Boston-based band is poised to break into the alternative-rock big leagues..."

ALTERNATIVE ROCK: Buffalo Tom's Big Red Letter Day sold a stunning 50,000 copies within weeks of release.

Bill Janovitz remembers that when his band Buffalo Tom came together in the mid-'80s, there wasn't a lot happening around U-Mass Amherst. At least compared to Boston, where "you could go to T.T. the Bear's and see the Neats and Volcano Suns or Moving Targets on one bill.

"If I could get a gig on a Friday night at a packed house at T.T.'s — that was my goal," recalls the carrot-haired guitarist.

Granted, it might be a Thursday night at Avalon, but Janovitz's wish has certainly come true. When Buffalo Tom headlines a Nov. 4 show at Avalon with the Dutch group Bettie Serveert and New Zealand's Verlaines, it should be a bill to inspire other fledgling rockers.

Even today — with Big Red Letter Day, Buffalo Tom's fourth album, poised to break the Boston-based band into the alternative-rock big leagues — the amiable Janovitz maintains a down-to-earth attitude.

"Really, we go along thinking, `Well, if we sell more records than the last one, and if we get more people to the live shows, or if we get to make the next record ... ," Janovitz says during a recent interview before the band embarked on a touring binge. "I don't think we'd be comfortable with runaway success. I think it would frighten us. We just want to move at our own pace."

Nonetheless, Buffalo Tom's pace has quickened in the wake of its Big Red Letter Day. Before a video for the single "Soda Jerk" was added into regular rotation at MTV, the album sold 50,000 copies within a few weeks of its release — already breaking sales for previous-album Let Me Come Over.

"We had no plan," bassist Chris Colbourn recalls of the band's start. "We had a lot of extra time in college, and we spent it going to see the Feelies and Violent Femmes. It was just a real natural thing. It wasn't immediately to record demos or anything. We'd just trade instruments."

The trio eventually settled into place with Tom Maginnis handling drums by default. Buffalo Tom released its self-titled debut in 1989 on the SST Megadisc label, produced by Dinosaur Jr. guitarist J. Mascis, a compatriot from U-Mass.

Like Dinosaur Jr., Buffalo Tom's first records were steeped in gristly guitar noise. But Big Red Letter Day, produced by the Robb Brothers (Lemonheads), rounds out an evolution to a more acoustic-layered rock sound that seems quite natural for the group's songcraft.

"There's a real lush, acoustic kind of flow to a lot of the stuff we write," says Colbourn. "Basically, [songs] are written on acoustic guitars."

"With the vocals,too," Janovitz adds. "We came from a more guitar-central point of view, where the guitar is the primary instrument. It was kind of like a punk-rock or garage attitude, where with the vocals, you do a couple of takes and that's pretty much it.

"But the Robbs came from [respecting] the vocal records of the '70s with the vocals up front — commercial-sounding records," he says. "So I think between the two philosophies, we struck a balance."

ELSEWHERE — The fall is heating up with several outstanding shows. When Dead Can Dance first toured these shores in 1990, it provided one of that year's most mesmerizing shows. Lisa Gerrard fronted the British group with an ethereal soprano that made Sinead O'Connor sound like an amateur. Dead Can Dance returns to the Berklee Performance Center Oct. 29 with its exotic blend of Gaelic and medieval musical influences.

Liz Phair doesn't like to play live, but the Chicago native — whose frank Exile in Guyville is one of the year's best indie-rock outings — plays Axis on Oct. 30. And for honesty and emotion in pure country, you can't beat songstress Iris DeMent, returning to Sanders Theater Nov. 7. She's a real sweetheart. ❑

Pieces of Poe

"...The forgotten fragments of Claude Debussy's projected Poe-opera La Chute de la Maison Usher have somehow stirred into plushly putrescent life and stand before us in a new recording..."

Roderick Usher was quite surprised when his dead sister returned from the tomb to strangle him. And just as Usher, aghast at clanks from the family crypts, turned to find the dearly departed framed and snarling in the doorway, we're delighted to turn and discover that the forgotten fragments of Claude Debussy's projected Poe-opera La Chute de la Maison Usher have somehow stirred into plushly putrescent life and stand before us in a new recording (George Pretre and the Orchestre Philharmonique de Monte-Carlo, EMI 7-64687-2).

The new disc features the re-animated Debussy opera, lasting about 25 minutes, and two shorter works in a similar vein: André Caplet's harp capriccio based on "The Masque of the Red Death" and Florent Schmitt's symphonic etude based on "The Haunted Palace." The union of Edgar Allen Poe's dark vision and the orchestral pastels of the French Impressionists may seem unlikely, but in fact, the marriage makes perfect sense. Poe's gothic vision, after all, was closely tied to the work of the French decadents. Debussy milks this connection; his lush orchestral palette provides the perfect expression for Poe's ornate and feral prose.

COLLABORATION: Debussy's lush orchestral palette provides the perfect expression for Poe's ornate and feral prose.

The opera in its reconstructed state is compact and subtle. Like the other pieces on the disc, it unsettles one not through broad ax strokes, but through a lingering sense of fear and decay. From Madeline's opening chant, here hauntingly sung by Christine Barbaux, we immediately inhale the pungent fumes of the rotting and recherché. The hazy languor of Debussy's Pelléas et Mélisande has become immobile ennui. The lush summer atmosphere has become clammy. Like Poe's writing, Debussy's opera works not through shock, as modern horror does, but through mounting dread. The brief piece culminates in a scene of unhealthy agitation as the narrator babbles fragments of an ancient-and-obscure epic in an attempt to drown out the rising music and the sounds of fumbling from the crypts below. The murder of Usher's heir is brutally depicted — and then the piece seems cut short. One imagines there would have been a few final bars to depict the sinking of the House of Usher and the quiet lapping of the murky tarn. The performance is strong and can be highly recommended. A major flaw, however, lies in the presentation: As with several previous issues in EMI's "L'Esprit Français" series, no text — in neither French nor English — is included. Needless to say, this kind of omission is bound to mar the performance for many.

André Caplet's contribution to the disc is almost as strong as Debussy's, with similar merits of subtlety of corruption. "Le Masque de la Mort Rouge," for harp and orchestra, depicts a ball held by a decadent prince during plague-time. Buoyant dance music floats through monastic halls, underscored occasionally by a morbid whiff of decay or disinfectant. The party is a smashing success until, at midnight, Death RSVP's. Caplet's vision of the tale is dreamlike and rich, self-consciously weird (the harpist, at one point, raps in ghastly fashion on the frame of the harp), and wholly enjoyable, although perhaps not as apocalyptic as Poe's own story.

Florent Schmitt's tone poem on "The Haunted Palace" is every bit as ripe but not as menacing. The rich perfumes of the poem's first half predominate. We are given only a brief-and-hectic glimpse of the "Vast forms that move fantastically/To a discordant melody" and the hideous rushing throng that closes the poem. The piece is passable, but not as deeply felt or creepy as the other works on the disc. It's sort of like riding the Tunnel of Love with Scriabin.

This is a disc for those who savor fear and corruption more than they do horror. It would be perfect for a Halloween party that features overripe fruit and Mexican spun-sugar skulls. In spite of some serious errors in presentation — the lack of libretto, the miscued tracks — we can't help but be glad that someone has finally bid Debussy's hideous progeny go forth and prosper ❑

Tired of Rubens already ? Get thee to the Armenian Library and Museum of America in Watertown. Known for exhibitions of exquisitè objects representing three millennia of Armenian history and culture, the museum is also committed to the art of our moment. The current show, featuring the watercolors and collages of San Francisco-based artist Sonia Kouyoumdjian, is delightful and immediately engaging.

The artist's collages invite close inspection. Symphony in the Language of Tapestry pays homage to the grand gardens of Europe and to the romantic activities that such lush surroundings traditionally inspire. Amid the waves of color that characterize this floral landscape, winged putti and secluded arches beckon us to enjoy the traditional pleasures of springtime — the ones where you don't get dirt underneath your nails. The same sense of humor manifests itself in Victorian Treasures, a world of sumptuous antiques peopled only by coquettish Lolita lookalikes. Ultra-'90's, Country Music evokes a world of glitz, cowboy boots and guitars.

Many of the most beautiful illuminated manuscripts in the world were made in medieval Armenia, and Kouyoumdjian's most striking work draws from this heritage. Christianity features a complex design of multicolored Armenian crosses while the Armenian Alphabet show wonderfully ornate individual letters. First and foremost, these animal letters are simply beautiful.

Landscapes dominate the show; Kouyoumdjian is equally at home with both broad vistas and intimate cityscapes. Her depictions of Italy are particularly atmospheric: the splashes of color evoke la dolce vita and a good glass of chianti. A more somber mood pervades Our Church, a deeply personal portrait of a medieval building and a quiet reminder of Armenia's crucial contributions to the development of Western ecclesiastical architecture. The artist's melding of aesthetics and historical vision make this show one of the more unusual and emotional offerings on the local scene.

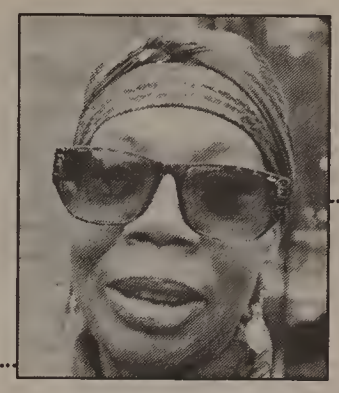
WOMAN ON THE STREET

BY KIM CAVINESS AND MEGAN GILMARTIN

"What will your funeral be like?"

Christopher, 30, Cambridge
"I was raised near the sea, so a cremation, with the ashes spread from a boat over the North Sea."



Richard, 26, Boston
"It'll be a state funeral, with the First Lady walking down Pennsylvania Avenue; the whole country is in mourning."

Roberta, 29, Boston
"Peaceful, with family and friends, maybe a ceremony at the burial site; with remembrance and inspiration I may have left them from my life."

Mike, 37, New York
"Burn me up and throw me in my mother's front garden next to the birdbath."

Dianne, 50, Boston
"A quiet little good-bye party, maybe in the Hopi Desert, and a bonfire, with me in it."

Ezia, 30, Newton
"No. 1: closed casket; No. 2: videotapes of me going the whole time; No. 3: lots of food, all Italian; No. 4: Prince music; and No. 5: no crying."

GENERAL FORECAST (If you know your ascendant, read it too)

The full impact of the mysterious Scorpio-Taurus full moon exactly Saturday at 8:38 a.m. won't hit home until the hornific Halloween weekend and Election Day are history, maybe by Wednesday, while loving Venus reaches out to Saturn in a sincere attempt at reconciliation. That's when you'll remember that the full moon made you crazy; that "it" — not you — was responsible for your obsessive behavior or inexplicable attraction to a real creature of the night. Costumes and makeup (while Venus squares inspirational Neptune and oddball Uranus on Saturday) are sure to be more artistic, more otherworldly than ever, but appearances alone won't account for the nasty vibes, the foul character traits that can erupt when bloody Mars squares Saturn/Satan 'round midnight. And if that isn't enough to unleash the worst in you, the vile and vicious Mars-Pluto conjunction on Monday will. Slash and burn, cut the crap and go for the jugular. The upside — and there always is one — can be a powerful wave of catharsis, the beginning of another two-year period of Scorpionic research, cleansing and healing. Another day, another dollar; another purification, the purge of another plague. Apocalypse when?

ARIES (March 20-April 19)

Well, you'll want to kill 'em (they being the U.S. Senate, the FDA, an association you belong to, or even your poker pals). Groups are your obstacles this week and attacking them your means of self-expression, maybe self-defense. Try to keep arms at arms' length, use your intelligence instead. While your Mars ruler, a heavy in its own right, contacts Saturn and Pluto, the other macho men of the solar system, big, bad, bold things happen. You're tapping into powerful forces, for good or for ill. Be careful, be clear.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)

Fickle. Facetious. Fractious. And finally fawning. Your Venus ruler steers you through a strange turn of events, starting with a simple change of heart (and costume) for Halloween, through a nasty (good nasty or bad nasty?) sexual experience, a hard-edged confrontation with authority and, as this thrilling ride ends, a heartfelt attempt at placating the powers that be. In the old days, we would sacrifice a virgin. Since that ain't you, babe, you'll have to buy your way out. Much luck, many bucks on the 8th.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)

Mercury, backtracking through your house of debts, service and small animals, could send you straight to the vet's or it could insist on sheltering whatever stray comes your way. The full moon illuminates karmic relationships, particularly love-hate, kiss-me-kill-me scenes from another marriage in another time. How you tiptoe through this minefield is not clear, but the message, "Watch your back," is. Actually, you're safer than most, but keep an eye on the ones you're with this week, particularly coworkers.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)

As your moon ruler reaches its glorious fullness and exaltation in Taurus, the sign, other than Cancer, where its influence is strongest, you might feel a bit like a potentate yourself. Power goes to the person who's respected, who has the deepest understanding of the human condition. Money doesn't enter the picture until Sunday, and then it's more about sheer entertainment and creativity than financing. Playing with the kids will cost, but not as dearly as changing your domestic arrangement on a whim.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)

Dancing by the light of the full moon this Halloween? Do it in the neighborhood or on native soil. Staying close to home can have dramatic results, producing a big-enough show to amuse family and friends for quite a while. And best of all, you don't have be the star, a Scorpio or Aquarius can play that part if you want to sneak off into the bushes. But make sure nobody's there casing the joint; security is an issue when Mars and Pluto meet at your house. Better check the locks, fuses, plumbing, etc.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)

Curiosity can too easily kill the cat this Halloween, so take precautions before you become too familiar with a stranger or a weirdness new to you. And if you're inspired to buy like mad, fight that feeling, too. Tackiness just might replace tastefulness this week. Fun, but ultimately folly. Writers, teachers and sales people, however, should give their all to their latest because passion pays off in spades. Advertise, philosophize and propagandize about the changes you want made now.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)

A more hopeful, better-looking change goes down at home or among family members while your Venus ruler tests the upsetting Uranus-Neptune vibe that's been hanging out in your Fourth House this year. This should be the last domestic inconvenience of '93, so get it over with and get on to something else. Come January, you might have to make new arrangements. Come Wednesday, you'll try to make peace with an intractable child or lover after they've been denied something they dearly desired on Sunday. Big day on the 8th.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)

You've felt it coming and now it's here: Catharsis, redemption, restitution, call it what you will. While Mars and Pluto, your two ruling planets, meet in Scorpio, you are honor-bound to get your due. Let's hope you've been the soul of goodness and can welcome your resurrection with open arms. (Bad guys go to Hades in a hand basket, which might be a trip worth taking.) This is the perfect backdrop for Halloween high jinks sacred, secretive, magical and extremely erotic, dangerous, too. Birthday bliss.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)

Associates, rather than true friends who know better, appeal to your on-again, off-again generosity by making a pitch for a political contribution or a social commitment you're not quite ready to give; awkward, but bearable. Less obvious, but no less forceful, are the demands your unconscious (or shrink) makes toward understanding and accepting a nasty aspect of your childhood or more likely, a nasty or troubled sibling. Good fortune through artists, decorators, etc. on the 8th.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 20)

Frivolous or fickle-hearted women who have some power over you exercise it this weekend. Hope all they manage to accomplish is a makeover. There's a certain amount of distress, but nothing major, no real character assassination or financial ruin. On the other hand, professional peers can do real damage if they attack what you value dearly. Are we talking about real life, a haircut or an extraordinary get-up for Halloween? Kiss and make up Wednesday night when loving Venus trines your Saturn ruler.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21-Feb. 18)

A high drama abroad may affect you at home. While your attraction to exotic people and places continues (for another week or so) you'll happily accommodate other lifestyles. This tolerance could get you through the less-than-happy events of the weekend, so don't abandon hope for a brighter future yet. Wednesday brings your just desserts and some sugar, too. Now, if only you could defuse militant governmental action, a suspicious employer or a paranoid parent, everyone (including you) would feel better.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 19)

I hate to remind you, but another of those ridiculously romantic, insanely inspirational Venus-squares-to-your-Neptune-ruler arrives just in time to transform you into a vision of beauty and/or beastliness for Halloween. Remember how willingly you sacrifice your all on the altar of art and spirituality? Before you manage to get nailed to the cross again, done in by another crusade, why not give your oppressor/idol the slip, fade into a crowd of supportive friends and save face? Maybe ass, as well.

A little book tucked inside an ecological good-guy of a burlap bag of seeds, The Hemp Seed Cook Book has one foot in the '60s and the other in a future it argues could be made mighty by the use of this ingredient. As the authors explain, with political anger (an irritation offset by the book's charmingly tidy, ink handwriting), the psychoactive properties of cannabis hemp have thrown people off the herb's ancient and could-be-again powers. Historically, hemp has been key in the production of food, fiber and cooking oil; it has all eight essential amino acids, and — coming in just behind soybeans — is 24-percent protein. Apparently, hemp has been the saving grace in times of famine for many countries and is now being studied for possible uses helping people with degenerative diseases. Moreover, since these seeds have been shown to support the immune system, researchers are examining hemp's potential for people with HIV. The book solemnly assures you that the enclosed sterilized seeds — although actually cannabis — will not get you high ("Neither will smoking the linen."). The authors then ask you to consider supporting the legalization of cannabis, not for oh-wow-stoned reasons, but for its many sober uses. The cookbook is full of commune-style recipes, using the seeds in walnut-loaf burgers, spirulina, even cookies. And, you can order hemp-linen fabric from the publishers, too.

Anne Sexton Lives

As with Sylvia Plath, this other Massachusetts poet's after-death fame has multiplied through biographies and through our almost-pestilential fascination with the shadow cast backward by her suicide on the poetry itself. Anne Sexton gave a packed-to-the-rafters reading soon before she died in 1974, and for people who were there that night, the sound of her voice is haunting still. This recording of Sexton reading her poetry restores the fascinating resonance — a rich, ominous, brandied timbre — and the undeniable classiness of that voice to the experience of getting to know her work, again or for the first time. These poems about love, sex, incest, God, children and madness are full of her extraordinary, shocking, sometimes-comic imagery. Spoken here in her intense voice, her work has a triumphant and, somehow, threatening aspect added to her tenderness and her pervasive preoccupation with death. "The business of words keeps me awake/I am drinking cocoa, that warm brown mama./I would like a simple life,/Yet all night I am laying/Poems away in a long box./It is my immortality box, my lay away plan/My coffin."

Bossy Boots and Hussy Hardware

Leapfrogging over the red-satin and black-lace corsets found at Victoria's Secret, Hubba Hubba — with a slightly antic whip in hand — caters to people on the wilder shores of sexy attire. And whereas the shopping needs of the rough-tough bondage crowd are met here with face masks and chain vests (the window itself offers a good representative cruise and the fainthearted may stop there); in fact, Hubba Hubba, a rebellious-teen-of-a-store that's been on Mass. Ave for 15 years, has outlived staider stores. A very entertaining place to visit, Hubba Hubba doesn't make non-whippers feel too square. The store carries items by companies with names such as Lust, Lip Service, Stormy Leather and Big Sex, which produce leather lingerie and latex tops and pants (latex is "huge" among fetishists, as is stretch viny), mostly in black, otherwise usually in red. You should not be surprised to find absent parts of the clothing or blatantly naughty pictures and words printed on them. A big thing to see is through. Madonna has left her mark in corsets whose bras are stitched in a bull's-eye pattern. A certain Very Big Local Rocker shops here and is apparently a fan of the black-vinyl-bondage Barbies. The Hubba market stretches — like vinyl — from practitioners of the bondage arts to people with a religious kink to those just fliply flirting with the dress-up nightclub version of the look. The store is closed on Sundays, because as Hubba Hubba's Martin put it, "Even bossy people have to recuperate." Shop hours are 12:30-7 p.m., Monday through Saturday.

Square Routes

Harvard, Central, Inman, Porter and Kendall Squares are nestled in a lot more than the People's Republic of Cambridge. Sure, it's the mecca of multiculturalism and vegetarians, but the six-mile city also harbors Republicans, computer geeks and the extinct great auk. Read all about it in this square guide to Cambridge and follow our Improper pointers to living on the other side (of the Charles).

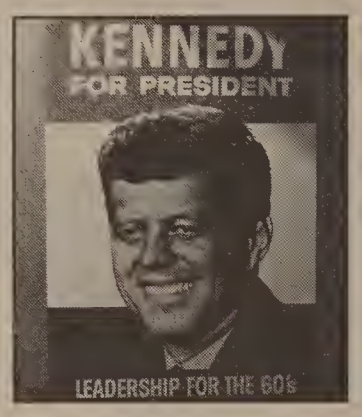
Farewell, Fellini



The Master of the Imagination, Federico Fellini, is dead, and — horribly — so is River Phoenix, at 73 and 23 respectively, mourns critic Gerald Peary. In this issue, his column pays homage to the Italian maestro and his masterpieces, especially La Strada.

Kennedy Museum

Twenty-five years ago, John F. Kennedy signed the Social Security Act and changed the way Americans lived. On the occasion's anniversary, a quarter of a century later, the Kennedy and Clinton families gathered at the new Kennedy Library and Museum to honor the legacy of JFK's political and personal life. Here are the historic moment's sights and sounds.

You've been thinking about getting a cellular phone, right?
At Metro Cellular, it's as easy as...

1. Come in to our Cambridge showroom or stop by our new Prudential Center push cart to select your cellular phone. You'll find all of the major brands of mobile car phones and portable (hand-held and pocket-size) phones at competitive prices. Our sales staff can help you choose the model and service plan that best suits your needs and budget.

2. Next, complete a simple credit application. As soon as it's approved we will contact you. (If you already know the model you want, you can apply for credit by phone or FAX.) When you pick up your new cellular phone, your sales rep will show you how to operate it. Finally, you will need to sign a 199-day activation agreement.

3. If you chose a mobile cellular model for your car, we will schedule an installation appointment at our 6-bay Cellular One Certified Service Center. (We have a loaner car so you can run errands while you wait.) Or, if you prefer, one of Metro's trained technicians will come to your home or office with our fully-equipped service van.

So that's all there is to it. ...Why not do it today?

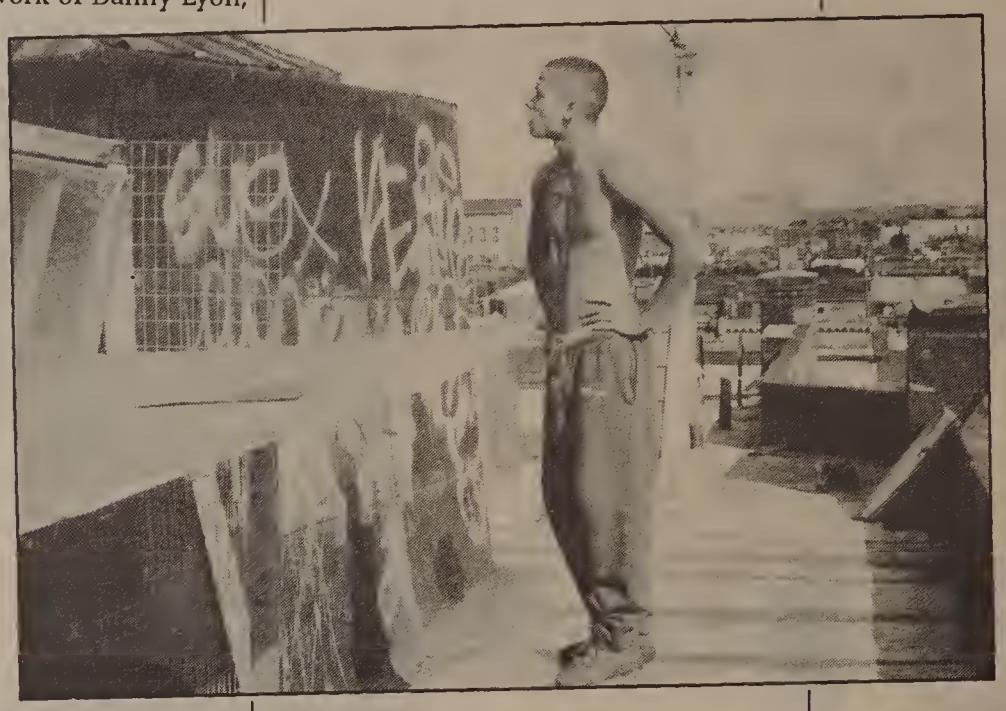
CITY RAVE

BY JENNIFER KORNREICH

WHAT'S HOT IN BOSTON NOW

COMEDY/THEATER

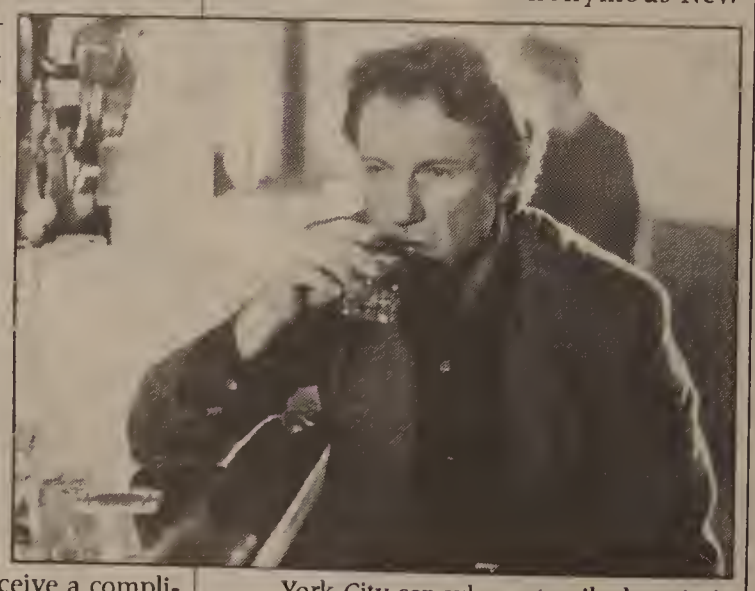
The Cantab Lounge in Central Square (738 Mass. Ave; 354-2685) is no longer just a dive for serious drinking and serious jamming. Catbox Cabaret, a small troupe that mixes its unique-and-bizarre brand of comedy



— a live snake and tobacco-spitting are incorporated into the show — with (mostly) original songs, shacks up in the basement of the Cantab every Saturday night. Starting at 8 p.m., the Catbox presents its own sketches and those of other underground troupes it produces. At 10:30 p.m., you get a chance to slip out of the carcinogenic room and breathe smoke-free air until 11:30, when the second, wilder part of the night, The Claw, begins. The Claw is an open forum for all sorts of artists to showcase their work until the wee hours. The only time slot that's prepared is the half-hour devoted to Catbox's ongoing serial, Once Upon a Time in the Decline of the West, an experimental work reminiscent of both Dickens and David Lynch. The entire evening, which is FREE, can be sorta Twilight Zone-ish and seedy; but it's always interesting, usually fun, and a nice break from posing like a fashion model at Newbury Street clubs.

BENEFIT

Los Angeles food-guru Michel Richard will be at Marais (116 Boylston St.; 482-7799) on Dec. 5 to benefit the American Institute of Wine and Food. At two seatings, 5 p.m. and 8 p.m., guests will have the opportunity to meet Richard, feast on a sumptuous four-course meal prepared by Chef Jackson Kenworth, with specially selected wines, and receive a complimentary signed copy of Michel Richard's Home Cooking With a French Accent. Limited seating, $125 per person. Call 482-7799 for details and reservations.



PHOTOGRAPHY

If you're a rebel without a cause, find your raison d'être at the Robert Klein Gallery, (38 Newbury St., 267-7997) now through Nov. 27. Rebel in America features the work of Danny Lyon, enfant terrible of the '60s and contemporary wanderer on a quest to capture the quintessential American spirit. Aside from his subjects, Lyon himself is the epitome of rebellion; he enjoys the distinction of having shared time in jail with Martin Luther King in Georgia. The Bikeriders series, documenting his affiliation with the Chicago Outlaw Motorcycle Club, is rumored to have been the visual guide for the film Easy Rider. Conversations With the Dead captures Texas prison inmates on death row; the series contributed to revamping that state's penal system. The debris of demolitions, the 1986 Haitian uprising, and heroin dealers in the Bushwick section of Brooklyn in 1993 round out this stark-but-dynamic exhibit. Oh, and if that's not enough to convince you, President Clinton digs this photog, too. Check it out. Pictured above right: Boobie from Lyon's Bushwick series.

VIDEO

Bad Lieutenant: A movie that makes the LAPD look saintly. Harvey Keitel gives an unabashed, electrifying performance as the anonymous New York City cop who out-evils the criminals he's supposed to catch. The Seven Deadly Sins would be child's play for Keitel's anti-protagonist, who indulges his diabolical cravings in creative ways. Especially riveting are Keitel's mental rape of two girls he pulls over for driving without a license and the real, very carnal rape of a nun by two boys in Spanish Harlem, a case that Keitel investigates at the cost of his last shred of sanity. Rated NC-17, Bad LT is not for the squeamish. Ideas, as well as imagery, are designed literally to shock you into using your noggin. To be sure, the adjective in this movie's title is an understatements.

SPORTS

Ahoy, mateys! Can't bear to give up your summer sailing? You don't have to, now that Community Boating Inc. (21 Embankment Road) devotes every Saturday and Sunday to its Frostbiters on the Charles River membership. Between Nov. 1 and Nov. 29, 9 a.m. to sunset, for $45, experienced nautical types (no beginners, please) can forge the waters of the Charles River Basin from the Longfellow Bridge to the Mass. Ave. bridge. Participate in competitive racing, or just do your own mellow thing. For info and reservations, call 523-1038.

FOOTBALL WIDOWS

The North End's G'Vanni's (2 Prince St.) is leading the way for restaurants that seek to add a dimension to the merely gastronomic: organizing weekly social events that incorporate food and friend-making.

If you find, all too often, that your lump-of-a-male companion leaves his butt-prints on the couch, just for a glimpse of the Patriots' tight pants, don't love him — leave him! Every Sunday and Monday from noon to midnight is Football Widow's Special Night, a much-needed version of Girls' Night Out. For only $19.95, you and your buds each get a four-course meal: any appetizer, salad, entree and dessert on the menu. G'Vanni's reports that Monday is the more popular night of the two, when lonely ladies left for linebackers take over at least a third of the room.

For coed noshing, G'Vanni's invites single diners to leave a message on its answering machine. The restaurant will then organize a party of four single men and four single women to dine at one table for $24.95 each, on Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday night.

Did we mention that for both events, parties of six or more receive free limo service? Call 523-0107 or 720-3663 for details and reservations.

PETS

If your dog is Cujo, you need not apply to the third-annual Pedigree® Bay Colony Dog Spectacular, held at the Bayside Expo Center (Exit 15 off the Southeast Expressway) Nov.

11-14 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. More than 1,200 pedigreed canines will vie daily for "Top Dog" honors. More than 130 breeds will be featured and insiders expect human attendance to reach into the several thousands. Concession stands and public-service booths will provide pooch trinkets, dog food, grooming accessories and pet toys for sale. Tickets are available at the door: $5, adults; $2, children/seniors; free for kiddies accompanied by an adult with a Pedigree® dog-food label. For more information, call 783-5530.

10 Happiness is ... going to see the Peanuts gang's You're a Good Man, Charlie Brown running at the Charles Playhouse, at 74 Warrenton St., Boston, Nov. 10-Jan. 2, 1994. It's a family musical, but fun for hipsters, as well. Call 426-6912.

THURSDAY

11 The one-man drama The Night Larry Kramer Kissed Me was heralded an undisputed winner in the New Yorker's survey of gay- and lesbian-oriented plays. It runs at the Lyric Stage, 140 Clarendon St., Boston, through Nov. 28; call 437-7172.

FRIDAY

12 The third annual Voices Louder Than Words Benefit Reading for the Homeless, 6 p.m. at Sanders Theatre in Harvard Square, features Douglas Adams, of The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy trilogy, and many others. A reception follows; tickets are $12.50 for the reading, $50 for the reading and reception. Call 496-2222.

SATURDAY

13 Fasten your seat belts and put your seat backs in their full, upright and locked positions, because the Museum of Transportation's Lifestyles and Wheels Benefit Auction is tonight! With the right bid, you could walk off with plane tickets to Germany, a Range Rover off-road-training course, or many other travel-oriented items. Tickets are $15, $20 at the door; call 522-6547.

SUNDAY

14 Scrooge you! OK, so it's not even Thanksgiving yet - but that doesn't mean you can't do a little early shopping at the Sixth annual Christmas Festival, today and tomorrow at the World Trade Center. It's a celebration of crafts, antiques and gourmet foods!

MONDAY

15 Garrison Keillor, the popular radio host, humorist and author of Lake Wobegon Days, performs his new show, The Story of Guys tonight at 8 p.m. at Symphony Hall, 301 Mass. Ave., Boston. The performance includes songs, poems and stories about men, "one of the world's greatest genders." Call 266-1200 for ticket information.

TUESDAY

16 The Harvard Film Archive (24 Quincy St., Cambridge) honors one of America's prominent independent filmmakers, local documentarian Frederick Wiseman, with a retrospective of his work. Tonight at 7 see part one of Near Death, a look at how people — inside and outside the institution — face death at the Medical Intensive Care Unit at Beth Israel Hospital. The remaining two segments continue Nov. 17-18. Call 495-4700 for information about the film series and other offerings.

WEDNESDAY

17 Hey, if Bill and Hillary can take a day off to see this, so can you. The John F. Kennedy Library and Museum, at Columbia Point in Dorchester, has been newly remodeled. It focuses on the political career and family heritage of President Kennedy, and the era in which he led our nation. Call 929-4523.

EXTINCT EXHIBITION: The Museum of Science has fossils, props and models on display in its Dinosaurs of Jurassic Park exhibition.

THURSDAY

18 WBZ-TV newswoman Liz Walker and rocker Jackson Browne attend Oxfam America's "Feast or Famine?" fund-raiser tonight at 8 p.m. in the Old John Hancock Building, 180 Berkeley St., Boston. To reveal fully how bad the hunger problem is in the world, 15 percent of those who attend this event get a gourmet meal; 25 percent share rice and beans; and the remaining 60 percent stand in line for rice and water (even Liz could be in this category!). Tickets are $25; $10 for students, seniors and low-income. Call 482-1211.

FRIDAY

19 As our community becomes even more culturally diverse, Boston International Fest returns Nov. 18-21 at the Bayside Expo Center. More than 75 regional ethnic communities will be on hand to present an exciting exhibition of art, music, dance, crafts, food and fashion. Tickets are $8; proceeds benefit the March of Dimes. Call 861-9729.

ONE-MAN DRAMA: Included in the New Yorker*'s survey of best gay-and-lesbian-oriented plays,* The Night Larry Kramer Kissed Me is onstage at the Lyric Stage through Nov. 28.

SATURDAY

20 Care to dance? Boogie over to Boston's biggest dance party, the Fifth annual AIDS Dance-a-thon at the Hynes Convention Center on Boylston Street. It's a four-hour entertainment extravaganza, with dance tracks, live music, two-stepping, ballroom and world-beat tunes. Find out where to get a pledge sheet by calling 424-9255.

SUNDAY

21 Boston University celebrates the cooks and recipes of New England with "Festival of Fare," featuring tastings, book-signings and cooking demonstrations by Julia Child, Jacques Pepin and Jasper White, of Jasper's Restaurant. The food fest (12-5 p.m.) is free to the public; food-and-wine tasting costs $5; cooking demos are $10 each. Call 353-9852.

MONDAY

22 Don't worry, the museum staff feeds them well. Learn the real story behind the Jurassic Park critters at the Museum of Science's Dinosaurs of Jurassic Park exhibition. Check out eight of the movie's dinosaurs, including props, gadgets and fossils. It's best to get tickets in advance. Call 723-2500.

TUESDAY

23 Acclaimed author Susan Sontag (The Volcano Lover, The Benefactor, On Photography) reads tonight at 8 p.m. in room 26-100 at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, 77 Mass. Ave., Cambridge. Best of all, it's free. Call 253-7894.

Duncan Kennedy
Power, Politics and High Heels

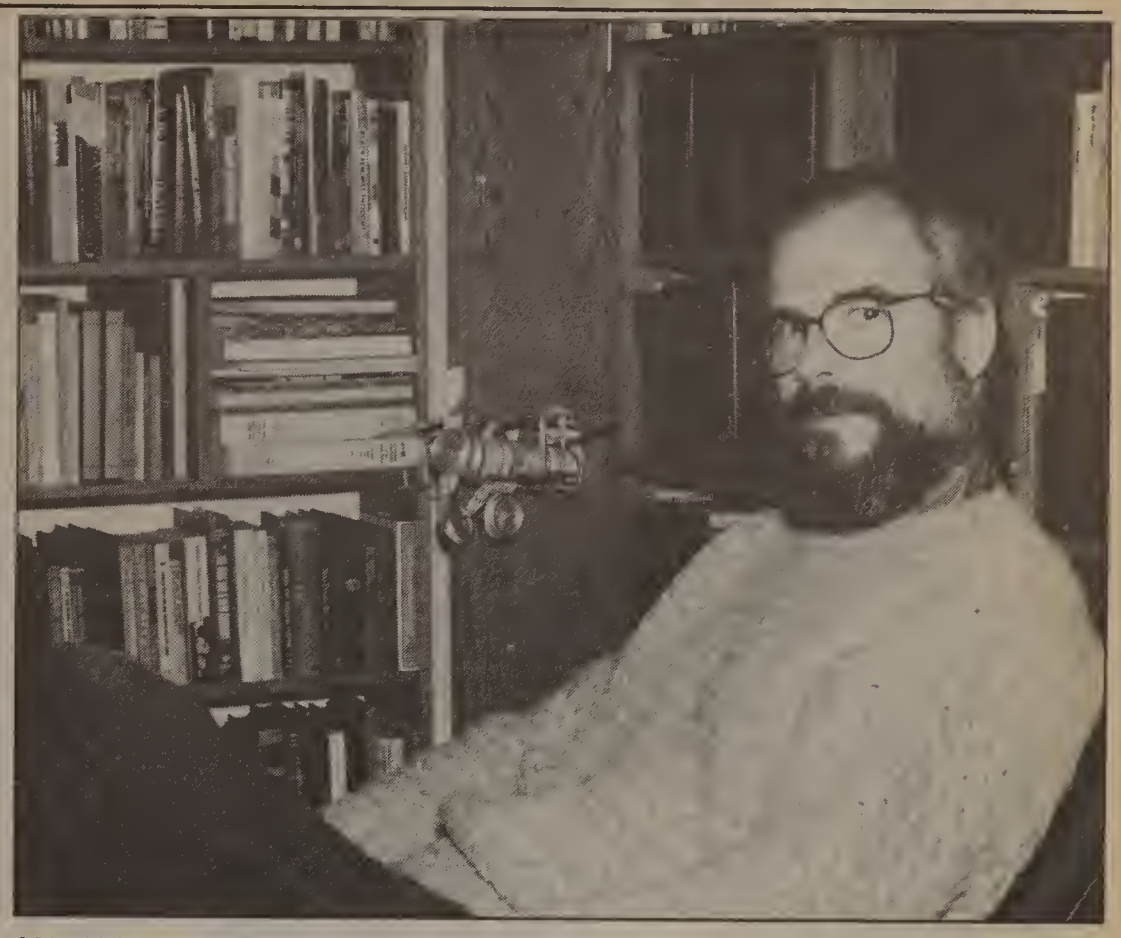
BY JULIE FLAHERTY

Three years ago, Duncan Kennedy refused to have his picture taken for the New York Times Magazine "as a gesture of resistance." Now, amid the perpetually still-unpacking state of his office (in one of the more modern buildings at Harvard Law School, of course), he leans back and smiles for the camera.

The man with the quirky, free-flowing rhetoric, who has written "millions" of essays and speeches, is learning how to plug his first book.

"This is what it's like to be Alan Dershowitz — all the time," he says.

Not that this law scholar has been completely overshadowed by his colleague. In the late '70s, in his most famous burst of jurisimprudence, Kennedy and a handful of other professors founded the radical Critical Legal Studies movement. The school of thought, which gave a stiff sentence to the legal teaching system, would shake the legal education world and cause a schism in the university, which he said was "one of the most hide-bound institutions in the country 25 years ago."



Kennedy, who not only admits to being "disruptive" but revels in it, may be trying to get a new goat with his recent book, Sexy Dressing Etc. Its titillating title — busty-corseted romance?, true crime? — is as misleading as the subject of one of its four very serious essays: women's erotic clothing and its cultural role in sexual assault and society.

"I don't think I would have dreamed of writing about this before the late '80s," he says, when what he describes as "postmodern, pro-sex feminism" came into existence. Specifically, he felt a straight, middle-class guy who had been radicalized by the war in Vietnam, the Civil Rights movement and the rise of women's rights in the '60s could finally participate in the dialogue of feminism.

"I wouldn't describe myself as a black nationalist and I wouldn't describe myself as a feminist, but I'd describe myself as a white-male radical looking for allies," he says.

In the book, subtitled Essays on the Power and Politics of Cultural Identity, Kennedy sees himself as "a combination of academic, political activist, voyeur, magazine-reader, cable-watcher and intellectual."

Above all that he puts the title of family man, with a wife (of 28 years), two daughters (grown), one cat, two parakeets, and a house in Cambridge (old, run-down Victorian).

MASCULINE-FEMININE: Harvard Law Professor Duncan Kennedy's new book, Sexy Dressing Etc., examines gender and power.

"I love Boston," says Kennedy, who has lived here his entire life. "It is a place where there is an awful lot of class-and-race antagonism and anger. But in a way, I think it's good to live in a city like that. It keeps you aware of the fact that there are people who really think they are being screwed, and that a lot of people are very aware that there are privileged people who are in some ways ripping everybody else off."

TRAILBLAZER: Dr. Frederic Frigoletto, new chief of ob/gyn at Massachusetts General Hospital.

Dr. Fredric Frigoletto
Labor of Love

By Jonathan Kooker

When Frederic Frigoletto first set his sights on medicine, the specialty that would always beckon was the hope and wonder of babies taking their first steps. Ever since he found his calling, Dr. Frigoletto, until recently the chief of obstetrics and gynecology at Brigham and Women's Hospital, has dedicated himself to understanding and improving the health of his field of practice.

As the latest addition to a long list of research endeavors, Frigoletto and his colleagues are testing a hypothesis that involves new labor techniques. The team is evaluating whether a model of care known as Active Labor Management (ALM) can reduce the amount of time a woman spends in labor and lower the C-section rate of first-time mothers. Although the official results won't be published until the spring of 1994, current data suggests that the ALM technique can reduce the rate of C-sections performed each year by up to 60 percent.

Also near completion is his department's research on the effectiveness of ultrasound exams. Dr. Frigoletto points out that even if congenital defects are detected, there is little physicians can do to correct the problems during pregnancy. With the average cost of an exam around $200, some have questioned the value of having two or three exams over the nine-month period.

It comes as no surprise that Dr. Frigoletto has already solidified immediate plans for the future. He recently packed his stethoscope and waved good-bye to staff and friends with the same hand that has guided so many newborns into the world. He's not leaving medicine, or even the city; he merely traveled across town to begin his tenure as chief of ob/gyn at Massachusetts General.

Seated behind his desk, Frigoletto heads into this new phase of his career with his usual trailblazing spirit. "At Mass. General, we'll have the chance to build a facility, literally from the ground up. There are two new floors waiting for staff, students and new research programs."

Such responsibility might prove formidable for another, but Frigoletto intends to approach the challenge just like "a baby." His philosophy reflects his years of dedication to ushering new life into the world.

"You have to learn to crawl," he says, smiling, "before you can walk. We'll take things one step at a time."

The Squares of Cambridge

Life on the other side (of the Charles)

by Gerald Peary
photos by Jay and Carmi Paris

FREEWHEELING: On foot or on bike, Harvard Square offers the adventuresome a Continental flavor, with its bookstores, coffee houses, film houses, and, not least important, more than 700 species of glass flowers.

T. S. Eliot and Patrick Ewing and Helen Keller and Eugene O'Neill all have lived there, and Robert B. Parker and David Mamet and Julia Child reside there now. JFK was among six U.S. presidents who went to college there. Tommy Lee Jones and Al Gore were roomies there; and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow and Amy Lowell are buried there.

Harvard and MIT, and the Fogg, Peabody, and Sackler Museums are located there. Comfortably.

Still, Cambridge isn't for everybody.

Called the "The People's Republic of Cambridge" by suspicious outsiders, those who refuse to venture across the Charles River and who regard the Somerville-Cambridge border as a kind of invisible Berlin Wall. They can't accept that, in 1972, this maverick town voted for George McGovern while the real America went for Richard Nixon. Or that, through the 1980s, Cambridge seemed to have sister cities — in Russia, Nicaragua, etc. — wherever the Honorable Ronald Reagan declared global enemies.

Or that Cantabridgians back a mayor, Ken Reeves, who is (a) African-American, (b) openly gay and (c) the worst sin, a staunch booster of the notoriously pro-tenant rent-control law.

Is Cambridge's stereotype as a radical haven an exaggeration? Certainly, there are pockets of Republican preppy yuppies about (Bill Weld, for instance), and, far more prevalent, three-decker-and-church, blue-collar families who back the police and fire departments and have voted for decades to keep conservatives such as Walter Sullivan (and now his son, Michael Sullivan) doing their stuff on the City Council.

MULTICULTURAL MECCA: What makes Cambridge exciting, enthralling, is undeniably its willful Otherness. There's no getting around that the city's six-square miles are positively overrun by backpacking college students, street musicians and magicians, vegetarians, lesbians, Haitians, anti-nuke activists, and multiculturalism, as people from all over the globe take to its streets and shops and bookstores.

And, yet, what makes Cambridge exciting, enthralling, is undeniably its willful Otherness. There's no getting around that the city's six-square miles are positively overrun by backpacking college students, street musicians and magicians, storytellers, vegetarians, lesbians, Haitians, anti-nuke activists, and various-and-sundry '60s liberals.

And there's no end to brainy, educated people. Peek into a Cambridge window and you will see ... bookshelves.

Finally, in recent days especially, multiculturalism reigns. All sorts of people — from about everywhere on the globe — are walking the streets, attending school, starting up businesses, and transforming Cambridge into an even more vibrant, dynamic, adventurous place.

Come on down!

Where to start? It's not exactly arid desert between them — still, there's a minioasis to be found at each of Cambridge's five squares.

Harvard Square

Begin with the mandatory stroll through Harvard Yard, the heart of ivy-covered Harvard University. That's where you'll find Cambridge's Best Library, the Widener, a rival to New York's 42nd Street Library for the size of its collection. Just outside the Yard is Cambridge's Best Art Collection, in Harvard's Fogg Museum, renowned for its Rembrandt drawings, important French Impressionist and Postimpressionist paintings, and its first-rate American Abstract Expressionists.

Nearby is the Busch-Reisinger Museum, a major depository for the works of artists who fled the Third Reich, including the largest collection of Bauhaus work outside of Germany. Also, visit the recently built Arthur Sackler Museum, specializing in Eastern and Oriental Art.

Cambridge's Best Museum is the Agassiz Museum of Comparative Zoology (1859), also on Harvard's campus. The public sees only a small portion of the museum's 10-million mollusks, 6-million insects and 250,000 bird specimens. And yet, what is there is enough: Extinct flying creatures such as the great auk, passenger pigeons, remains of the largest turtle to crawl the earth, a 750,000,000-year-old dinosaur egg, etc.

Visitors get four Harvard Museums for a single admission. Besides the Agassiz, there's the Museum of Mineralogy and Geology, the Peabody Museum of Archeology and Ethnology (wonderful figurines from Mayan excavations, Hopi musical instruments, etc.), and the Botanical Museum containing perhaps Cambridge's Most Spectacularly Kitschy Sight. There's no content; it's all dazzling style: the world-famous Ware collection of glass flowers: 700 species recreated with uncanny realism by two German artists in Dresden between 1877 and 1936. But why?

Do you want more culture in Harvard Square? The Brattle Theater, 40 Brattle St., is the Best Repertoire Film House in all of America, with splendid, idiosyncratic double features seven days a week. The Harvard Film Archive, 24 Quincy St., Cambridge's Best Art House, specializes in serious movies from around the world, usually in 35 m.m. (A selection of recent Greek films shows until Dec. 14.)

Cambridge's Most Skilled Theater Company is the American Repertory Theater (ART), founded by critic Robert Brustein and housed at the Loeb Drama Center on Brattle Street. The ART is most famous for its collaborations with such avant-garde figures as director Peter Sellars, playwright Robert Wilson, and composer Philip Glass.

Folk music? Cambridge is where it all began, more than 30 years ago, for Radcliffe student Joan Baez at Club 47, now Passim's, Cambridge's Best Folk Venue, as friendly and informal as ever, at 47 Palmer St. Jazz? The big names pass through the slightly too-upscale Regattabar in the Charles Hotel. Blues? That's what the House of Blues is named for, at 96 Winthrop St. Bookstores? Wordsworth Books, 30 Brattle St., is unbelievably well stocked with new hardbound works and paperbacks. It's Cambridge's Best New Bookstore. Also, try Barillari Books around the corner, at 1 Mifflin Place, for deep discounts. Cambridge's Best Remaindered-Bookstore may be the best of its kind in America: the Harvard Bookstore, 1256 Mass. Ave. That's where you go to pick up an intellectual. Cambridge's Best Used Bookstore? McIntyre and Moore at 8 Mount Auburn St. is the most comprehensive, although unusual items crop up on the shelves of the Pangloss Bookshop at 65 Mount Auburn.

Now, let's stop and eat.

Cambridge's Best Lunch is the $5.95 all-you-can-eat at the Bombay Club, 57 JFK St., superb Indian fare including devil-red Tandoori chicken, and with a fine view of the Square. Also highly recommended: veggie lunches at Grendel's, 89 Winthrop; the great beef-brisket sandwich at Rosita's in the Atrium on Church Street; fried-oyster sandwiches with lettuce and tomato at Skipjack's, 5 Bennet St.; Bartley's, 1246 Mass. Ave., for basic burgers, of course, and trusty meat loaf.

For dinner: the Shilla Restaurant , 95 Winthrop, for sublime hot-peppery Korean meats and soups; The Dolphin Seafood, 1150 Mass. Ave., very cheap, fresh from the ocean, plenty of food, no frills, the perfect place to take unpretentious out-of-towners and hungry relatives;. The Harvest Restaurant, 44 Brattle St., for demanding, elite out-of-towners who don't mind paying for fancy wines and classy food. Cambridge's Best Service:. Skipjack's again, 5 Bennet St., for a broiled-fish dinner, beginning with Cambridge's Most Glorious Hors d'Oeuvres: the $8.95, pink-centered tuna sashimi, Skipjack's signature dish.

SOUTHERN STARS: The hot shots at Jake and Earl's barbecue joint in Inman Square are Elvis and the burnt-ends pork sandwich, with baked beans and watermelon.

Kendall Square

The home of MIT doesn't look that promising when you exit the T. The streets are austere and functional, surrounded by high brick buildings. However, a quick exploration brings dividends. Cambridge's Best Public Art is surely the metallic galaxy and park benches at the gateway to Kendall Square. Within the Cambridge Center at One Kendall Sq. is Cambridge's Best Fast Food Emporium, including Sbarro, with luscious deep-dish pizzas, and Yummy, with a soulful, $5, real-fried-chicken plate. At 20 Ames St. on the MIT campus is Cambridge's Most Adventurous Art Gallery, the postmodern List Gallery, brilliantly curated by Ron Platt and Helaine Posner. The current show, The Anxious Salon, is a sexually challenging redoing of monumental European painting.

The MIT Press Book Sale Annex at 55 Hayward St. boasts a most-unusual selection of remaindered works on robotics, artificial intelligence, art, and architecture. Quantum Books, 4 Cambridge Center, 4 Cambridge Center, specializes in hardware and software. It's Cambridge's Best Computer-Bookstore.

Cambridge's Best SecondHand Clothes Store is the Garment District at 200 Broadway, a warehouse of punk, hardcore and rock 'n' roll fashion. And where else to get Cambridge's Best Fish Chowder than at Legal Seafood's, 5 Cambridge Center? Also much recommended at Legal: the draft beer, the Bloody Marys, the clam chili, the halibut dinner, and bananas Foster for dessert.

Recently, the MIT-food action has moved to 1 Kendall Sq., several blocks away on Hampshire Street. There's lots to like: the soups with soba-and-udon noodles at the Goemon Japanese Noodle Restaurant; the DOG DAYS: During rush hour, Central Square springs to life, and its denizens, such as the Dog Lady, take to the sidewalks of Massachusetts Avenue.

ESPRESSO LANE: Cantabridgians, more Continental than their neighbors south of the Charles, know the art of lingering in cafes.

drunken pork chops in Amber Ale at Cambridge's Most Amiable Drinking Hole, the Cambridge Brewing Co.; Cambridge's Fanciest Brunch, $15 on Sundays, at the Blue Room, also renowned for its Caribbean-style seafood.

Central Square

Ethnicity, rock clubs, doughnut shops, neighborhood characters. Drop in on Paul, smoking his pipe, at Paul's Shoe Repairs, 698 Mass. Ave. Talk about the Sox and her beloved Roger Clemens with Judy at the desk of the Cambridge Family YMCA, 820 Mass. Ave., on the way into Cambridge's Best Pickup Basketball. Chat with Sharif about black nationalism and Islam at Sharif and Isa's Oils and Book Center, a colorful cart of goods by the Harvest Cooperative Supermarket.

Cambridge's Best Used-Record Store is Cheapo Records at 645 Mass. Ave. where the employees, music savants, know EVERYTHING about every record ever released. Test them. Cambridge's Best Night Out for Music is a tie: Little Joe Cook holds forth with rhythm & blues at the Cantab Lounge, 738 Mass. Ave., or Monday nights at the Greene Street Grill, 280 Greene St., when top local rockers such as Morphine play several sets to accompany the $8.95 Caribbean dinners from genius-St. Thomas cook, John Levins, Cambridge's Best Ethnic Chef.

Talking about great chefs: try the amazing home-cooked lunches by Iranian-born Yassamin Healy at the Plough and Stars, 912 Mass. Ave., along with Cambridge's Best Beer on Tap. Oh, the heavenly Black and Tan! But what if you prefer a Bud? Cambridge's Best Cheap Beer Joint is surely the Bradford Cafe, 452 Mass. Ave., which looks like the kind of place that the T-shirted Jackson Pollock crowd hung about in the 1950s.

These days, the Bradford's comfy booths attract the overflow crowd from both of Cambridge's Best Rock Clubs, the Middle East, 482 Mass. Ave., and around the corner, 10 Brookline St., at T.T. the Bear's.

The Central Square story would not be complete without mention of: the nurturing lentil soup at the Ethiopian-cuisine Asmara Restaurant, 739 Mass. Ave.; the South Indian specials at the Ghandi, 704 Mass. Ave.; the Syrian salad and beef-kabob sandwich at Moody's Felafel Palace, 25 Central Square; the cashew-chicken-salad sandwich at the Brookline Lunch, 9 Brookline St.; and Cambridge's Best Homemade Soup, at Cezanne's, 424 Mass. Ave.

Inman Square

The only Cambridge square away from the subway, but worth the walk for: Rosie's Bakery, 243 Hampshire St., Cambridge's Best Bakery for a decade of dream bars, shortbreads, cakes and its truly world-famous chocolate orgasms. House of Sarah Books, 225 Hampshire St., Cambridge's Most Underrated Used Bookstore, a fine collection of literature, women's books, and — most unusual — books about women and religion. New Words, 186 Hampshire St., is Cambridge's Best Women's Bookstore. Casa Portugal, 1200 Cambridge St., so cozy and unpretentiously Continental, is Cambridge's Most European-Feeling Restaurant. Try the Iberian seafood dishes, with whiting and clams.

Dragonfly, at 1297 Cambridge St., Cambridge's Most Hip Collectibles Store, featuring old ashtrays, salt shakers, 1940s dresses, and a $1-box of wide ties. Also: the Back Alley Theatre, 1253 Cambridge St., for Improv Boston on weekends; Ryles, 212 Hampshire, for Berklee-influenced jazz, especially Friday's occasional Brazilian nights.

Frankly, the East Coast Grill has become haughty, smug and overpriced. Instead, the recommendation is to go next door (it's the same kitchen) to 1273 Cambridge St. for Cambridge's Best Southern Barbecue at the five-stooled Jake and Earl's. The burnt-ends pork sandwich, with baked beans and watermelon, is irresistible.

Or cross the street and join the crowds for the abundant food and real-Jewish-chicken soup, at the very reliable S&S restaurant, 1334 Cambridge St., certainly Cambridge's Best Family Restaurant.

WOMANLY WISDOM: New Words, a landmark in Inman Square, holds a treasure of books by, for and about women. Especially strong is the feminine-spirituality section.

Porter Square

With the T's extending toward North Cambridge in the last few years, Porter Square is coming into its own. The Porterhouse Cafe at 2046 Mass. Ave. has Cambridge's Best Texas Barbecue, and Christopher's at 1920 Mass. Ave., a great place for college students to gather, also makes Cambridge's Best Hamburgers. Marcella's at 1808 Mass. Ave. produces several of Cambridge's Best Sandwiches. Try the extraordinary roast beef with Italian sweet peppers or the chicken-salad pesto. The Bookcellar Cafe at 1971 Mass. Ave. has, nightly, has Cambridge's Best Live Readings. And Frameworks, 2067 Mass. Ave., has patient, knowledgeable artists advising you how to mount and hang photos and paintings, making it Cambridge's Best Frame Store.

The Porter Exchange in the old Sears Building at 1815 Mass. Ave. is a private universe, mostly Japanese. A best-of food tour inside would include: the spicy-chicken dinner at Cafe Mami; soups and boiled greens at the organic Masao's Kitchen; carrot juice or protein shakes at Juicy Jack's; the fantastic baked Sonoran chimichanga at Snakebites Canteen; Cambridge's Best Margarita at the Cottonwood Cafe; and shrimp-and-vegetable tempura with udon noodles, Cambridge's Best Soup Dish, at Ittyo's.

It's hard to be more hip and conclusive than Cambridge's Best Video Store, Hollywood Express, 1740 Mass. Ave., which has piles of foreign films, documentaries and even a special Alfred Hitchcock section. But if it's porno you want, there's no need to journey to the Combat Zone. Porter Square has it all at our last Cambridge stop: Cambridge's Best X-Rated Videos at City Video in the Porter Square Shopping Mall.

That's all! ❑

THE HOLE TRUTH: Made fresh hourly, Bruegger's Bagels is no longer one of Porter Square's secrets. In the background are samples of the T station's public-art program.

The Game

Harvard & Yale tackle 110th match

by Jay Fraser

On Nov. 20 Harvard and Yale will meet on the gridiron for the 110th time. "Gentlemen," Yale football-coach Tad Jones told his team in 1923, "You are about to play Harvard. You will never do anything so important for the rest of your lives."

The annual Harvard-Yale football match will always be "The Game," as Charles Loftus, Yale's director of sports publicity, dubbed it in 1948. To some, it's the premier athletic event of the fall. More-casual fans simply think of it as the renewal of one of the great traditions in college sports. Few realize, however, that this long rivalry has had a profound effect on the development of football in the United States.

EDWARD KENNEDY: The right end scored Harvard's only touchdown in 1955. The team still lost.

The first Harvard-Yale game was played on Nov. 13, 1875, in Hamilton Park in New Haven. It wasn't the first intercollegiate football match — that had taken place six years earlier between Princeton and Rutgers — but it predated the first World Series game by 30 years, and basketball wasn't invented until 1891.

Harvard won that first contest, four goals to none, in front of a small-but-enthusiastic crowd. Accounts of the game noted the accuracy of the Crimson passing attack as well as its running and "bodying." The captains of the teams agreed to meet again the following year and a tradition was born.

Another, more questionable, tradition also began after the game. As the New Haven Register reported: "Seven Harvard students were arrested in this city Saturday night for creating disturbances by hooting and singing in the public streets. They all gave fictitious names and deposited their watches and other articles of jewelry as security for a fine of $5.29 in each case."

In its early days, American football was based on English rugby. The playing field was 140 by 70 yards, the game lasted 90 minutes, and a team consisted of 15 men. The rest of the rules — and there weren't many — were subject to change and often ignored.

In order to systematize the rules, representatives form Harvard, Yale, Princeton and Columbia came together in November 1876. They decided to call themselves the Intercollegiate Football Association and to meet every year. The head of the Yale delegation was a man named Walter Camp, who would later become captain of the Yale team and then its coach. Over the years Camp devised a number of innovations that would change the game of football forever. Up to that time, the play began with a rugby-style scrum, two loose groups of players pushing against each other. Camp suggested that teams should run individual plays starting from a line of scrimmage, and that a neutral space of one yard should be kept between the teams before the snap of the ball.

In the early game, a team could hold onto the ball until it scored, whether they were making any progress or not. In one particularly dreary contest, Princeton kept the ball for the entire first half and Yale kept it for the entire second. Camp suggested that a team should be given three chances to move the ball five yards, and if it failed they had to hand it over to their opponents. He called the chances "downs." He also suggested that to measure the advance of the ball, the field should be marked off with a chalk line every five yards. Camp's suggestions were all eventually adopted as rules, and still form the basis of the American game of football.

Throughout the decades, many men who went on to fame have worn the crimson or the blue on the gridiron. John Hersey, author, and Archibald MacLeish, essayist, playwright and poet laureate of the United States, both played for Yale. Gerald Ford, the 38th president, was an assistant football coach for the Elis in the 1930s.

Endicott "Chub" Peabody, who would later become governor of Massachusetts, was a guard on the Harvard teams of 1939 through 1941. He gained notoriety as the last lineman to play without a helmet. Two other prominent politicians also played for the Cantabridgians: Robert and Edward M. Kennedy.

Bobby Kennedy was a right end on the Harvard teams of 1945 and 1946. Although relatively small (5-foot-10; about 150 pounds) he played with great determination. He approached The Game in 1946 with a fractured right leg. Nevertheless, with his leg heavily braced and taped, he went onto the field with the kickoff team and even made a tackle.

Teddy Kennedy, also a right end, played on the Crimson teams of 1954 and 1955; he had a moment of glory during The Game in 1955. The match was played during a swirling snowstorm in New Haven; the Harvard offense was frozen, unable to move the ball. Late in the third quarter, Kennedy caught a pass deep in Eli territory and ran it in for a touchdown.

Unfortunately for Harvard, it was its only score of the day. Harvard lost, 21 to 7. ❑

Although some adjustment is needed for those of y'all who've grown attached to the original cast, the new Clampett family will quickly win you over with its backwoods ways and down-home hospitality. Elly May is a little tougher (she wrestles bears for honey) and Uncle Jed, a little less wise (he gets arrested for breaking into his own house), but Granny's still mixin' her elixir, and there's still a raccoon in the pot. The film is star-packed and very funny. The casting is right on the money — all except for Jim Varney (Uncle Jed) who can't seem to shed his Ernest image.

M.R. D'Entremont

A solid, engaging work by first-time director Robert De Niro and playwright/screenwriter Chazz Palminteri about a boy who is torn between his love for two men: his decent working-class father (De Niro) and flashy, neighborhood goodfella Sonny (Palminteri). What keeps A Bronx Tale from being a straightforward morality tale is the fact that the "fathers" aren't so dissimilar: both are honorable men in their own fashion. Francis Capra as the young son is smart, impressionable and a wise guy — there's no question why he finds Sonny so appealing. Lilio Brancato as the teen-age son is not as convincing as a potential mobster. He's sweet, too sweet — there's no question he'd rather be loved than feared.

K. Wilson

FATAL INSTINCT

If you've seen Fatal Attraction, Basic Instinct, and Sleeping With the Enemy, then Fatal Instinct will be worth a few laughs. This multiplotted spoof does contain some hilarious and clever twists (this time the family pet gets taken on a roller-coaster ride). But the film also carries many good jokes too far (the toilet-paper-stuck-to-the high-heels bit), and it has many just-plain-idiotic scenes (Bob Uecker's courtroom play-by-play in which evidence is tossed around). Armand Assante as the obsessor and Sean Young as the obsessee are OK, but the film as a whole is quite forgettable.

M.R. D'Entremont

FEARLESS

Why is this admirable film ultimately disappointing? The answer may lie in the uneven tone and disjointed story; maintaining a grip on the characters amid the confusion is difficult. Still, the surrealistic horror of the opening images — surveying the aftermath of a terrible plane crash — knocks the wind out of you. The film's mystical approach to the reluctant hero's (Jeff Bridges) new sense of invulnerability and ghostly detachment from his family is a welcome twist on the straight comedy of Hero. A good point for debate is the scene in which Bridges attempts to release fellow-survivor Rosie Perez's guilt about her dead baby by smashing his car into a brick wall. Is the scene merely absurd or is it justified as an oddly rational act that appears completely irrational?

J.W. Hall

Macaulay Culkin shocks us as the precocious but sadistic Henry, who seems angellike to everyone except his visiting-cousin Mark (Elijah Wood). The tension builds as Mark continually uncovers and tries to expose Henry's dark side to deaf adult ears. Shot in Cape Ann, Mass., and Minnesota, the film is packed with effective, ominous "height" imagery: cliffs, bridges, wells and tree houses. Henry's lack of conscience and antisocial behavior are given no psychological explanation, but Culkin is quite convincing as the bad son and we readily accept him as just plain evil. Not recommended for children or acrophobics.

M.R. D'Entremont

HOUSE OF ANGELS

This warm, moving Swedish film about a young woman, Fanny (Helena Bergstrom), who moves from Berlin to a tiny Swedish village after inheriting her grandfather's estate takes on universal themes: city vs. country, change vs. tradition, and the individual vs. society. Fanny and her male companion, both flamboyant cabaret performers, shock the stuffy townspeople with their drinking, parties and black leather. We become convinced that Fanny and her friend are genuinely nice people, and at first the film succeeds in condemning prejudice. But when their behavior becomes increasingly outrageous in response to some of the townspeople's vicious attacks, the line between right and wrong blurs and the film loses its point.

M.R. D'Entremont

Good campy fun, although it's apparently meant to be a serious thriller. Taken at face value, the film is utterly ridiculous in all dimensions: plot, direction, acting, and most of all, writing. Yuppie college-town couple, played by Bill Pullman and Nicole Kidman, find their marriage is becoming strained after the new hot-shot doctor in town (Alec Baldwin) rents a room in their house. When Baldwin botches an operation on Kidman, she takes the huge settlement and leaves the dazed Pullman, who decides to track her down and discovers things aren't quite what they seem. Adding to the mess is a tossed-off subplot of a serial killer on campus. The best line belongs to the ultra-confident Baldwin: "I am God." Lots of shots of Smith College and Boston.

Just try to resist the charm and chemistry of Matt Dillon and Annabella Sciorra (is she not the most lovable of today's girl-next-door actresses? What a smile!). It's quite impossible, even if they're placed in a romantic comedy that's as predictable as the alimony payments that irk Dillon. He can't stand forking over his electrical-worker wages to his ex-wife, Sciorra, who ditched him when she decided to go to college. He decides to resolve his anger by finding her a new husband, "Mr. Wonderful." You haven't seen enough Hollywood movies if you don't know the ending (the film pleads for the date-movie tag-line). Still, director Anthony Minghella gets terrific performances out of his leads and Dillon's frustrated girlfriend, touchingly played by Mary Louise Parker.

SHORT CUTS

Arguably the best film of the '90s, so good that it even survives an inadequate, less-than-earthshaking ending. The Robert Altman of Nashville still lives, thank God, re-energized by the collapsed moral center of middle-class Los Angeles. Altman weaves together several Raymond Carver short stories about couples fighting, falling apart and screwing around. It's a scathing, pornographic tragicomedy on the level of Last Tango in Paris, a film that takes chances and asks hard questions about what it means to be human. Breathtaking acting from Tim Robbins, Jennifer Jason Leigh, Jack Lemmon and Chris Penn, among a huge, great cast. Discussion groups ought to be mandatory afterward; so many emotions are stirred up, a release is needed.

Day of the Dead

"...The team who brought us Howard's End applies its literary sensibility to a story of a butler who realizes too late that he may have wasted his life..."

Everything about The Remains of the Day, even the title, is solemn, dignified and restrained. Producer Ismail Merchant, director James Ivory and screenwriter Ruth Prawer Jhabvala, the team who brought us Howard's End, are incapable of making a slapdash film that panders to its audience. Here they apply their literary sensibility to Kazuo Ishiguro's award-winning novel about a proper, perfect English butler who dedicates his life to serving his employer and realizes too late that he may have wasted it.

FATHER AND SON: Mr. Stevens (Anthony Hopkins, right) and his father, played by Peter Vaughan, in The Remains of the Day.

A wealthy American (Christopher Reeve) acquires Darlington Hall and its butler, Stevens, who served the former owner, Lord Darlington, for more than 20 years. The house's heyday during the '30s has long since passed; Lord Darlington is dead and the great rooms in which he hosted international conferences and secret meetings with heads of state are empty. The enormous serving staff is now a skeleton crew. When Stevens receives a letter from a former housekeeper (Emma Thompson) hinting that she may want her old job back now that her marriage is breaking up, he sets off on a motor trip to visit her.

Steven's journey is a trip down memory lane. The film moves back and forth between the present (the '50s) and the '30s to explore Stevens's key relationships and the turning points in his life. His aged father, a former butler whom Stevens hires as an underbutler, falls gravely ill in the middle of an important conference; Stevens carries on. Stevens becomes increasingly close to the housekeeper Miss Kenton (Emma Thompson) but is unable to admit that their relationship is anything but professional.

In spite of a marvelous performance by Anthony Hopkins, two hours is a long time to spend with a man such as Stevens. While it's true that Stevens is motivated and guided by the highest professional ideals, it's also true that he's a man who makes a virtue out of a necessity. Stevens is terrified of genuine human contact because he's terrified of losing control. Whenever Miss Kenton touches him, literally and figuratively, he lashes at her with his so-called professionalism.

The film has a watery, depressed feel. The director uses circles of light — a porthole in the pantry door or a car headlight — to suggest alternatively a telescope lens and a spotlight, both of which limit the world (as Stevens's world is limited), and, at the same time, highlight, illuminate and even distort it. Blue- and green-grays are used extensively, and the weather is often cloudy and damp. The music is monotonous and insistent. Stevens's father is so tall and pale in his black suit that he looks like a zombie and even Stevens, when illuminated by white light, looks dead at times.

The novel is bleak but less oppressive than the movie, and it feels more relevant. Told in the first person in Stevens's precise, utilitarian prose (he's keeping a trip diary), he soon launches into an exposition of what it means to be a great butler. Right away the reader learns about the star that guides this man, and the section puts subsequent events and relationships in a context that the movie can't fully provide. The book makes it quite clear — the film doesn't — that Stevens views his most-extreme, controlled behavior as triumphs of great butlering. When, in the novel, Stevens gives clear voice to his awareness and pain at having put all of his eggs in the wrong basket, It's a heartbreaking moment, but one that makes him a fully realized, meaningful character. There's no comparable moment in the movie, which takes away Stevens's voice.

Without it, he's just a cold fish. ❑

FAREWELL, FELLINI

"...The immortal La Strada (1954) not only established Fellini as an important Italian director, but, when shown internationally, almost single-handedly created a new category of movie: the Art Film..."

I'm writing this the day after — following the weird, macabre Halloween that took away both actor River Phoenix, 23, and Federico Fellini, 73, the great Italian film director.

Phoenix's tragic death I can't fathom, nor talk about. As the years pass, it will become clear that he was this generation's James Dean. So, to Fellini ....

His death was not quite so unexpected. TV viewers around the world saw him, in obvious faltering health, accept a special Academy Award for Life Achievement last spring. Who can forget his looking into the Academy audience and addressing his sobbing wife, actress Giulietta Masina? "Please, please, stop crying, Giulietta," he gently admonished her, she whose tears confirmed Fellini's precarious hold on life.

Masina, of course, shares more than a long, long marriage with her director-husband. She was the fragile, Chaplinesque waif in Fellini's immortal La Strada (1954). The film not only established Fellini as an important Italian director, but, when shown internationally, almost single-handedly created a new category of movie: the Art Film. With La Strada, moviegoers decided that films could be as sensitive, symbolic and philosophical as literature. Fellini's success made it easier in America for, among others, Ingmar Bergman and Alain Resnais, Michelangelo Antonioni: foreign-tongued directors whose subtitled dialogue exuded Meaning.

These filmmakers deserve their intellectual reputation, and Fellini above all. Still, it's a bit off-putting to realize that many of Fellini's ardent fans don't like movies very much. He has been championed most fervently by those who disdain popular culture and sneer at everything ever produced by Hollywood.

Fellini may have been off-put as well by these snooty sycophants. As a youth, he ran away with the circus, and, whenever possible, he squandered his days at the popular movie house. After that, he made a living by drawing crude cartoons and was later employed as a tabloid journalist.

Given a chance to make his own films, he happily populated them with live-action comic-book heroes: (The White Sheik), broken-down actors (I Vitteloni), circus performers (The Clowns) and tacky stars (La Dolce Vita). What can his elitist adulators make, for example, of his affectionate casting in La Dolce Vita of the bosomy, Swedish sex-queen Anita Ekberg and ex-Tarzan-of-the-apes Lex Barker? Is Fellini that far from the trashy cult films of Baltimore's John Waters, which show off such third-rate luminaries as Joey Heatherton and Sonny Bono?

"Well, there's 8 1/2," declare Fellini believers, bringing up his most revered, honored work. High modernism. The Cinema as Art.

"The most overpraised film ever made," I say.

Has there ever been a more bloated, conceited, self-indulgent, self-important work? A more sexist, retrograde paean to the Male Creator? God, all those grotesque faces pushed into the camera, all those ugly people ridiculed by the extreme wide-angle lenses. All those busy, busy scenes, as if profundity is measured by how many frantic images pop into the frame.

I have trouble, too, with some other highly regarded Fellinis. Fellini Satyricon (1969) and Casanova (1976) are cold, heartless works. Juliet of the Spirits (1965) is too dreamy and oversymbolic. Ginger and Fred (1986), Fellini's last film, is slight and maudlin.

But after that, I spring aboard the Fellini bandwagon. The White Sheik (1952) is a warm, cute comedy about a chaste, young, married woman who races off for the day with her most beloved melodrama actor. I Vitelloni (1953) is a splendid poetic tale of male friends longing for art and adventure in a stifling provincial town. The Nights of Cabiria (1956), also starring Masina, is a harrowing tragicomedy about a whore with a heart of gold. La Dolce Vita (1959) is an autobiographical masterpiece about a journalist caught in the decadence of modern Rome. The Clowns (1970), Fellini's most underrated film, is a fabulous homage to those big-footed, white-faced, red-nosed, squeaky-shoed performers. See how many of them you can squeeze into a pint-sized car.

Fortunately, all of these films — the great, the good, the grotesque — are available at better video stores. Try any Videosmith or, in Cambridge, Hollywood Express. While Fellini sleeps, honor him by watching his sublime movies. ❑

LOST AT SEA

"... While it's good to see an unfamiliar Ibsen, the Huntington's production is not likely to redeem The Lady From the Sea's reputation ..."

The Huntington Theatre Co. has been consistently outstanding for so long that the preachy melodrama and slack performances in Henrik Ibsen's The Lady From the Sea are a striking disappointment. The work is seldom performed in the United States. (This is the first professional Boston production since 1926.) While it's good to see an unfamiliar Ibsen, this production is not likely to redeem the work's reputation.

The production originated last March at California's Berkeley Repertory Theatre; one is tempted to ask if the long layover might be the problem. Or is it the clunky new translation? The caliber of West Coast actors? The answers are as uncertain as the evening.

Norwegian actress Juni Dahr, in the principal role of Ellida Wangel, is by far the most interesting character on stage, although her internal obsession and icy posturing are at a distance from galvanizing emotion. Ellida grew up by the sea (her father was a lighthouse keeper; her mother went mad) and feels a special link with it. Her longing has deepened during the years Ellida, trapped in a marriage of convenience, has been living in a remote mountainside town on a fjord. Her husband, Dr. Wangel, is kind and generous but has no idea how to deal with her nervous gloom or his grown daughters' resentment of his new wife.

HAUNTING PERFORMANCE: Leading Norwegian actress Juni Dahr delivers a powerful lead role in the Huntington Theater's The Lady From the Sea.

Ellida is haunted by a promise she once made to her young sailor lover. Throwing their linked rings into the ocean, they had bound themselves to each other and the sea. She later tried to break it off, but his letters insisted he would return for her. Three years ago, the terrifying power of her lover resurfaced: her child's eyes reminded her of the sea. Her son died in infancy. Since then, she has not "been a wife" to her husband.

Although Ibsen's plotting suggests a 19th-century version of the satanic Rosemary's Baby, or at least a drama about the tormenting pull of obsessive love, his concerns were actually about social conformity and a woman's free will and personal responsibility. Ellida had "no will of her own" with the sailor, and married the doctor simply because she had no other means of support. She feels she can only choose between the two when she is freed from her marital bond. But with freedom comes responsibility, and that changes everything. The obsessions vanish in the unexpectedly clear light.

Director Sharon Ott, repeating her Berkeley chores, keeps all the talk — bald exposition, melodramatic imagery, thematically twined subplots — moving along, but does not restrain the melodrama nor unify the plot. The early talk about the sea doesn't resonate with metaphor, and the climactic pivot of free will comes out of nowhere.

We seem to be watching one play, but the final curtain rings down on another.

The supporting players surrounding Ms. Dahr are blank, bland and not strong enough to match her classical style nor counterweigh her brooding force. The strapping, straight-shouldered actress is not without melodramatic flourish, but it suits Ellida's torment and is highly communicative.

Kate Edmunds's set, with its craggy stone mountains plunging steeply into the fjord, leaves little playing space for the actors. But the opening images of a waterfall and a goddess emerging from the water are stunning. The lighting, by Peter Maradudin and John Martin, colors the space between the mountains accordingly. Deborah M. Dryden's costumes are generally of the era, although Ellida's flowing attire suggests ancient Greece. The translation, by Gerry Bamman and Irene B. Berman, is pedestrian and largely devoid of poetry. ❑

GET REAL

"...The Anxious Salon presents artists who emulate the academic realism that was soundly rejected by the French Impressionists..."

Visitors to The Anxious Salon, at the Massachusetts Institute of Art's List Center for the Visual Arts, are likely to do a double take and for a moment think that they are viewing The Age of Rubens, at the Museum of Fine Arts. This is not a coincidence, confessed curator Helaine Posner during a recent discussion about the exhibition's artists: two Norwegians, Odd Nerdrum and Hanneline Rogeberg; Attila Richard Lukacs, a Canadian; and two Americans, Vincent Desiderio and Thomas Woodruff.

As the word "salon" implies, this is a presentation of artists who emulate the academic realism that was soundly rejected by the French Impressionists but is justified in this exhibition by an infusion of mordant and confrontational "anxious" values and issues.

The Anxious Salon: Narrative Content in Recent Contemporary Painting is certainly a quirky and unpredictable show, with its espousal of an Old Master approach to subject and technique. For MIT, known for its controversial and cutting-edge programming, it's quite a leap from last year's Corporal Politics. That show was supported by Aerosmith after the List was denied an NEA grant because of an executive veto. Compared to the museum's widely respected, contemporary programming, The Anxious Salon seems out of sync and off the wall. At first.

But the big news in the art world has been a pervasive return of interest in all forms of painting. Hence, MIT offers this timely survey of epic-scaled, figurative, narrative painting. Given the traditional nature of the paintings, Posner and her collaborator, Ron Platt, realized that the usual stark-white walls just wouldn't work in this case. Posner confided that they copied the show's dark wall colors from the MFA's Old Master galleries and even borrowed a couple of round benches. You need to sit and stay a while to unravel the rich-and-complex layers of meaning and irony in this stunning and often disturbing exhibition.

A brooding Nordic feeling hovers over this show, due to its range of psychologically charged subjects. Nerdrum's dark, Rembrandt-like palette depicts isolated, nude figures, set against a stark-and-bleak landscape that seems to be culled from the scenes of peasant life by the Flemish-master Brueghel. This medieval quality is enhanced by models who wear leather peasant caps while mysteriously wrestling with large fish or cavorting in a pas-de-trois dance macabre, seemingly set to the music of Carmina Burana.

ODD NERDRUM: The Wanderer Imitates a Cloud, 1990, oil on canvas

The corpulent nudes of another Nordic artist, Rogeberg, offer an amusing and uncanny resemblance to the fleshy models of Rubens. The full-figured look is back with a vengeance. The artist paints with the bravura brushwork and the boffo, in-the-buff gusto of the Dutch masters. And, the theme of the sad clown is revived in a series of color-coded, self-portraits by Woodruff.

For different reasons, the epic-scaled works by both Lukacs and Desiderio are challenging and seductive to the eye but also unsettling. The superb technical skill and dramatic composition and lighting of Lukacs's huge-and-troubling painting, Where the Finest Young Men...., presents a revolting celebration of violent, degenerate, nude skinheads with S&M-fetish gear, swastika tattoos and other neo-Nazi symbols. It is a glaring example of visually compelling art espousing despicable social-and-political values.

Desiderio's enormous triptych is provocative and disturbing on a more subtle level. With deadpan academic realism, the center panel depicts a spooky, candle-lit seance evoking Picasso's ghost, staged in his last studio. In the left panel a boy in a bunk bed, who is supposed to be asleep, presses his ear to the wall to hear his parents, who are making love in the right panel. The mood evoked is creepy and intriguing, but voyeuristic.

While the content of this show may, indeed, make some viewers anxious, at least you can see what you are getting into. ❑

THE TEST OF TASTE

"... It had become increasingly difficult just to appreciate the characteristics of flavor because the primary question had changed from Do I like it? to Should I like it?..."

When I first started exploring wine, I judged each new bottle in the same naive way that I would assess food: by how good it tasted. Eventually, of course, I wanted to go beyond saying, "I liked it; it tasted good." Then it dawned on me how profound and complicated the whole subject is. I fell quickly in line with so many other budding wine enthusiasts: awed, easily impressed, and eager to accept the proclamations of anyone who sounded knowledgeable.

FALL HARVEST: Judith and Terry Maloney of West County Winery have issued a varietally blended, engaging cider.

As my casual interest deepened into a passion, as wine unexpectedly began to matter to me, I found the pursuit less and less pleasurable. It had become increasingly difficult just to appreciate the characteristics of flavor because the primary question had changed from Do I like it? to Should I like it?

This, as I later learned, is not an entirely unusual progression. Just as it is common to "graduate" from sweet to dry and white to red, there are many beginning wine drinkers who pursue what others tell them is good, to the exclusion of drinking what they actually enjoy. In my case, it may have cost a good deal of time and money, but after a while, I did rediscover how to stop thinking so much and taste the wine again, albeit from a broader perspective. Many others, however, at all levels of experience and industry involvement, remain spellbound by what might be referred to as the tyranny of fashion.

The way in which too many people think about and discuss wine reflects an unfortunate reluctance to advance past the boundaries of accepted opinion. Few choose to challenge authority. In some cases though, trendy ideas about which wines are worthy and which are not loom so large that tasters who might disagree actually grow convinced that their own experience is deceiving them. Every time we taste and like a wine, and then ask nervously, "What did they rate it?" or "What did the Big Guy think?," the tyranny of fashion asserts itself. Minds are often changed and perceptions altered as a result of the answer. I have witnessed people's actually denying that they enjoyed a wine that they felt was not acceptable to like after they discovered its identity.

Alert, skilled tasters may benefit greatly, however, from the tyranny of fashion. In the short run, any wine that has not been officially sanctioned carries a lower, and in some cases, a farcically reduced price tag. This is where the savvy professionals may distinguish themselves: by promoting the worth of a wine scorned by influential opinion-makers. Wine categories without any current cachet or sizzle, such as California Chenin Blanc, may encompass certain examples that are so wonderful that they represent outstanding value to the consumer. Adventurous wine lovers are free to discover them and reap the advantage. In the long run, however, water seeks its level; if a wine consistently is undervalued, this means that the producers are putting more into it than they are getting in return. If they cannot make it fashionable, and hence profitable, they will probably cut corners and stop making the wine taste so good.

These thoughts all came to me after a thoroughly pleasurable recent encounter with the premium alcoholic ciders of Massachusetts's own West County Winery at Daddy-O's Bohemian Cafe in Cambridge. Ellis Seidman and Paul Sussman, the creative chef/owners of this visually exciting bistro, had the foresight and courage to feature the apple wines as natural partners to their locally based fall-harvest menu. The best of the many ciders tasted boasted a backbone of fresh acidity that nicely balanced the hearty-and-eclectic fare.

Apple wine? The range of styles, reflecting different varietals, sweetness and alcohol levels offered by West County is enormous. Quite enjoyable was the varietally blended West County Cider, a perky, engaging wine that showed light-medium body, sweet fruit and tart acids. Its flavors echoed Riesling. The West County Dry showed even better with its ripe aromas and pure, delicate fruitiness. At $5 retail, it is well worth the gamble. But buyer beware: you are now decidedly outside the fashion mainstream. ❑

EXHILARATING ITALIAN

"...Folks who appreciate imaginative food served in bountiful portions but at a moderate price will think Porcini's is great..."

Porcini's in Watertown offers as exhilarating and joyful an adventure in Italian cuisine as you are likely to find anywhere in metro Boston. It is just the type of restaurant that folks who appreciate imaginative food served in bountiful portions but at a moderate price will think is great. On the other hand, those offended sitting nearby anyone not dressed entirely in black may register some spiteful qualms and quibbles.

The restaurant exudes real Continental charm and sophistication, yet none of the pretentious trappings that so often interfere with dining comfort. Energy is expended selecting fresh, pure ingredients and devising inventive preparations rather than laboring over sparse, picture-perfect plates. The menu does not offer a single predictably safe or cliched dish. Service is likewise informed and professional, with real care evident rather than stiff formality.

IF YOU GO

PORCINI'S

68 SCHOOL ST.,
WATERTOWN
LUNCH: Tues.-Fri. 11:30 a.m. -3 p.m.
DINNER: Every Night, 5-10 p.m.
924-2221

The room itself is inviting, set in soft Mediterranean pastels and full of visual whimsy. Porcini's is a vibrant, fun place to eat. Adding to the liveliness, the kitchen is partially open so that pleasant cooking aromas on occasion waft into the dining space.

One is greeted with a basket of deliciously warm and crusty homemade focaccio that immediately scores points. This is the proverbial meal-in-itself incarnate. I have generally found that restaurants that respect bread to this extent prove very satisfying as dinner progresses.

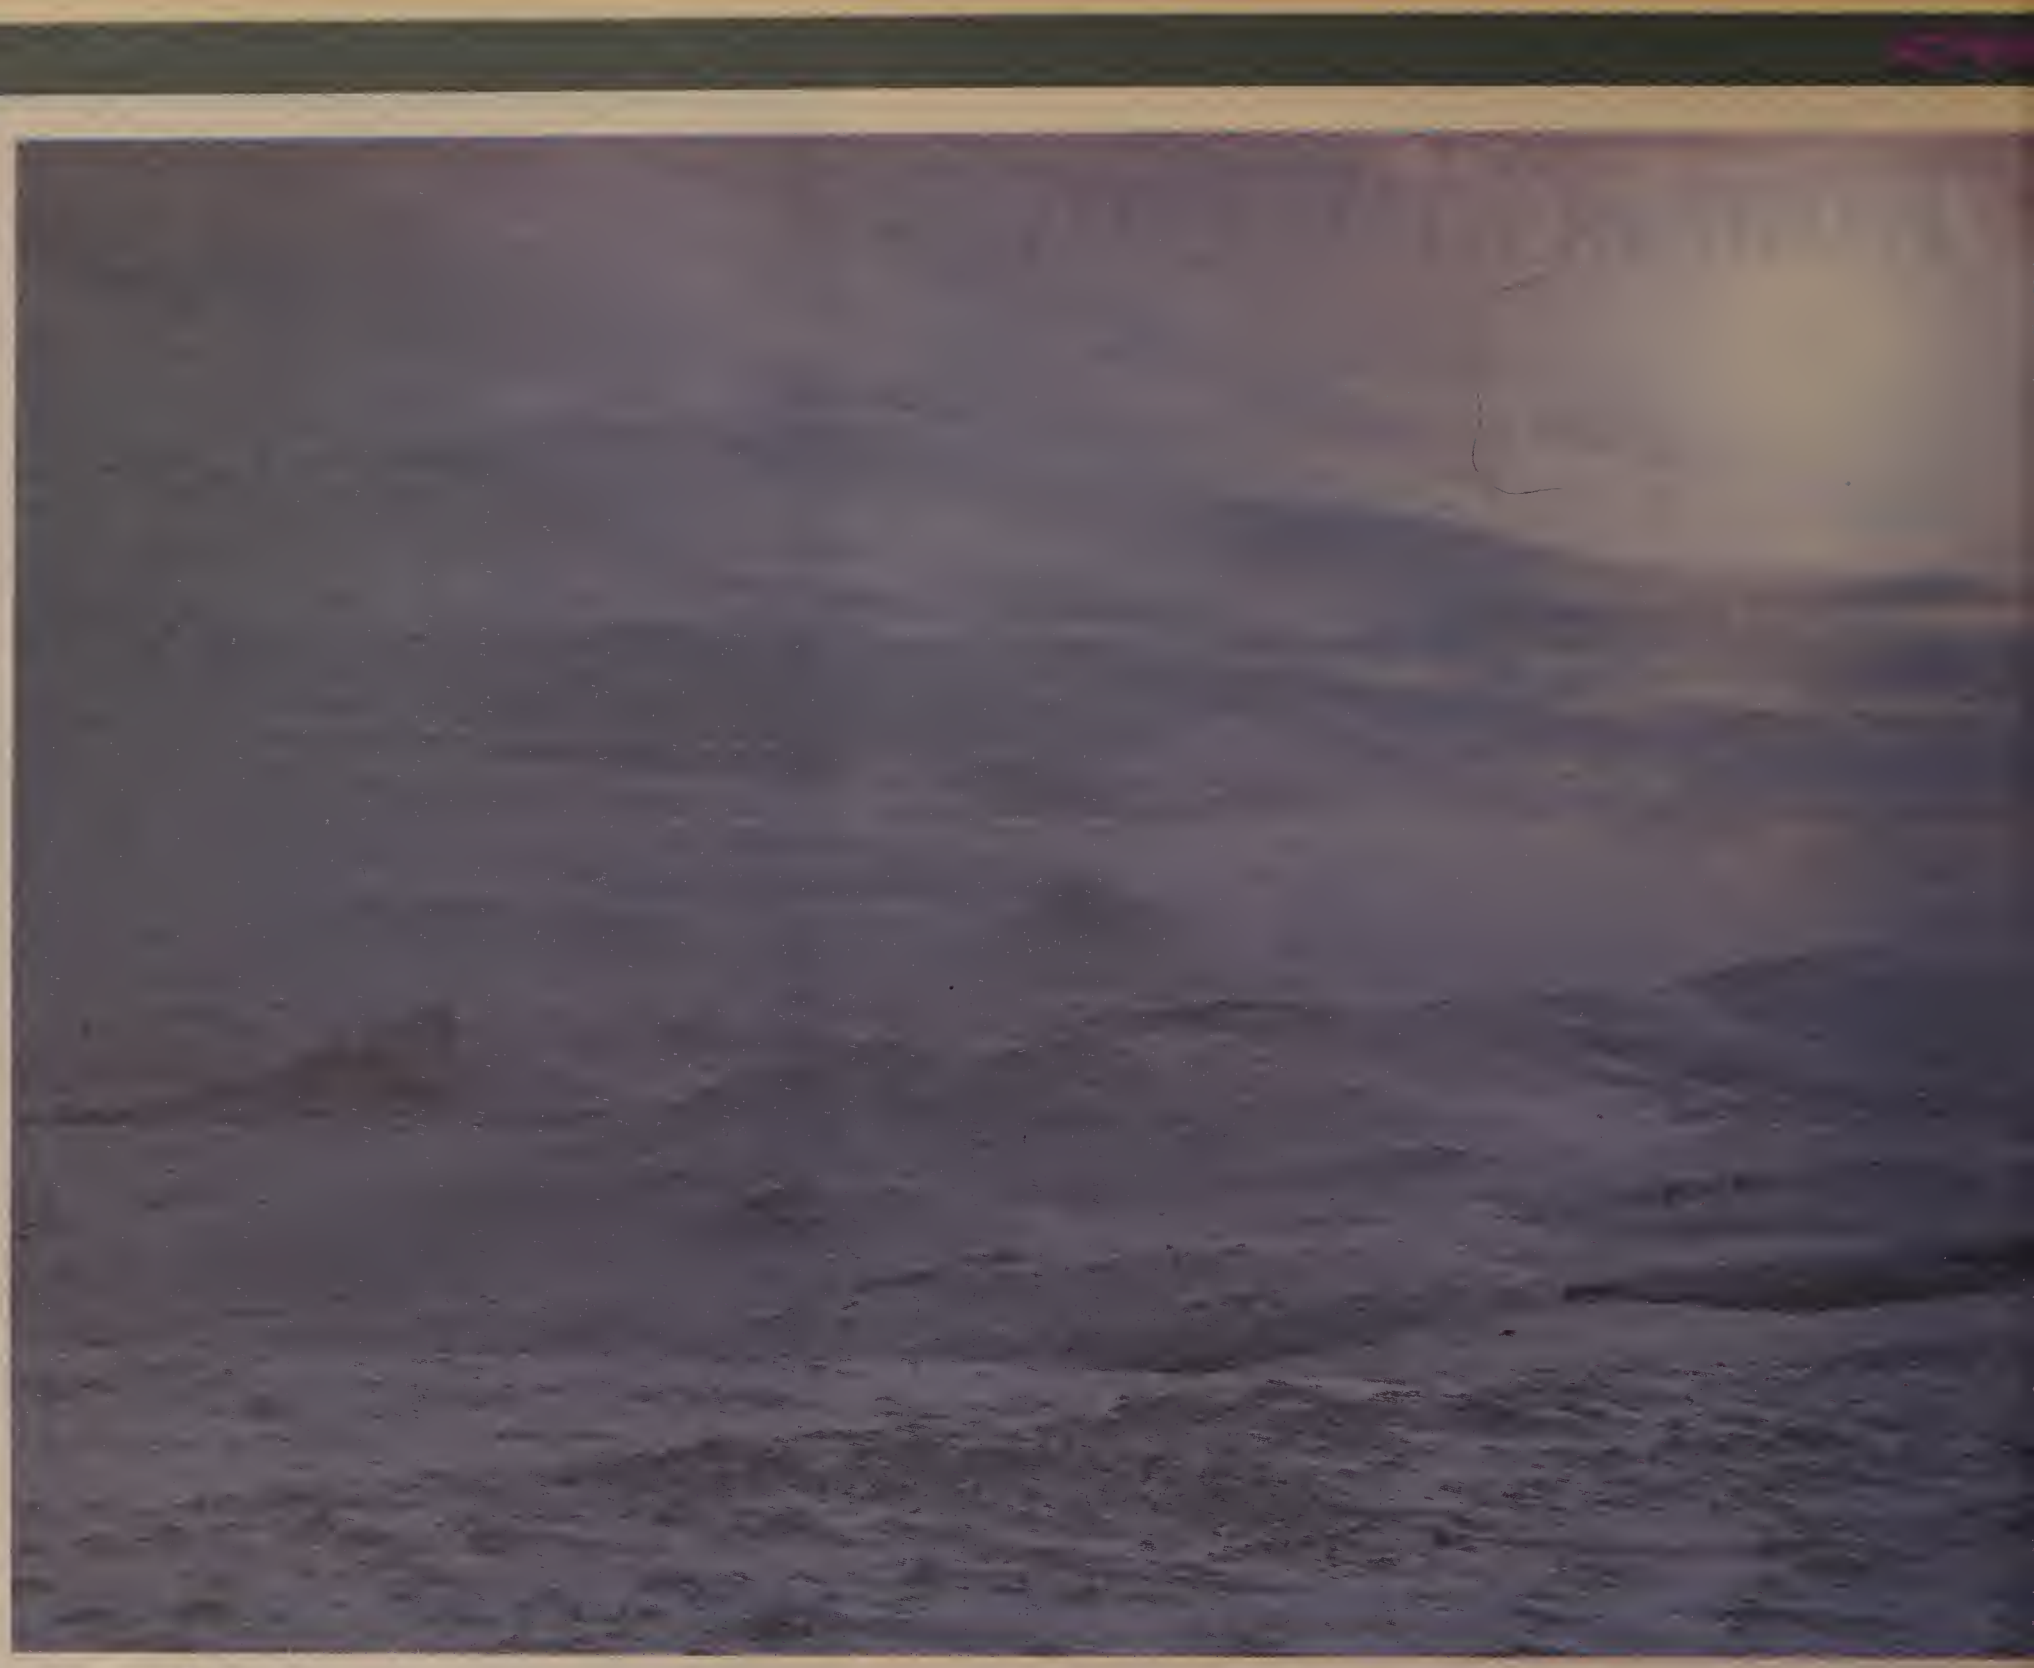
Wood-grilled shrimp with tomatoes, fennel and oyster mushrooms serves as a wonderful introduction to the kitchen's talent for flavor extraction. The seafood is done to perfection, fresh and juicy, and expertly grilled, and the seasonings are judicious and well integrated. Pungent, sweet, earthy and acidic flavors commingle in a low-key but most effective harmony.

The beef tenderloin tart with risotto and porcini sauce shows great inventiveness, while it also qualifies, above all, as real food lovingly prepared. This appetizer, more than any other dish, epitomizes how far the chef has gone beyond the overrefined culinary-school preciousness that often prevails elsewhere. Although the presentation is not a work of art, the flavors are vivid and gutsy, the texture broad and robust without being heavy. The crust is flaky, the meat tender, the risotto just crunchy enough and the earthy mushrooms otherworldly. Dare we say it, but the dish exudes subtlety.

The main courses are equally impressive. Each has a real lustiness about it and the dishes are heroic in proportion. Traditional Italian flavors predominate in a tuna steak with pimentos, roasted garlic and tomatoes. The thick steak may be dense, but not dry in the least, marked by wood-firing and a melange of aromatic herbs that help release its considerable flavor. The preparation shows an unerring sense of harmony: the vaguely sweet-and-soft garlic balanced by tart tomato juices; the rich meatiness of the fish set off and enlivened by liberal seasoning.

Pan-fried ravioli filled with butternut squash and pureed prosciutto with a peach-thyme butter provides unique and unforgettable culinary fireworks. The combination of flavors is inspired, touching all the bases on the taste horizon: sweet (squash, peach), sour (fruit acidity), salty (prosciutto) and bitter (fried ravioli, thyme, lightly burnt butter). Textures, too, are a glorious harmony of viscous, chewy, crunchy and more delicate sensations. The chef's enthusiasm for broad, penetrating flavors is clearly showcased in this thrilling creation; the browned, nutty-tasting peach butter itself is a sheer delight.

Desserts are equally irresistible. The warm apple, raisin and berry crostada served over creme anglais features impeccable flavor balance, while the tiramisu is spectacular. It is creamy rich, with authentic mascarpone that is delightfully set off with coffee liqueur, espresso and raspberry.



Few restaurants can encompass as wide a spectrum of clientele as Porcini's: the family, the young couple, the businessman, the casual and the serious diner all can feel comfortable and satisfied here. Tell your friends: Something exciting is going on in Watertown. ❑

OYSTER BAR • RESTAURANT

If it were a planet, it would be Pluto. An island in the stream. A speck of rock in some parallel universe. Remote. Isolated. As far from reality as we know it or could ever begin to imagine or comprehend it.

We realize another bottled water is the farthest thing from your mind. May we suggest one that's even farther?

until you reached the shores of Antarctica. It is precisely this location, so completely and utterly cut off from the influences of civilization, that accounts for one of the most breathtakingly pristine environments in the world.

Iceland is like no other place on earth. Within a whisper of the Arctic Circle, it is enveloped by the sea. So apart is it from the rest of the world, you could journey south and not see land again until you reached the shores of Antarctica. It is precisely this location, so completely and utterly cut off from the influences of civilization, that accounts for one of the most breathtakingly pristine environments in the world.

As you can well imagine, the air here is remarkably clear, the land virtually indistinguishable from that which it has been for millennia. And the water. Let us tell you about the water.

We call it Akva. A spring water that flows up from a place far below the ice and rock. Untainted. Untouched. Unspoiled. And of such a purity that it is difficult, if' not impossible to conceive of another quite like it.

We think you will agree once you've tried Akva for yourself. What you will discover is a surprisingly soft taste. Crisp. Clear. Free of sodium. Free of impurities of every sort. The end result of a natural, geophysical purifying process unique to Iceland.

We can understand, of course, your lack of excitement upon hearing the news of yet another spring water. There are, we know, so many. All of which would have you belicve they are the purest thing since the angels.

We do think, however, you will find Akva refreshingly different and worth the modcst price of sampling. To do so, we suggcst your favorite corner market or deli.

Thcre now, you see? It's just like we've already told you. There rcally does exist a chance to find a genuinely pure water in this world. Evcn if it is a bit remote.

Akva spring water. The pure soul of Iceland.™

261 Northern Ave., Boston's Fish District, 338-3093.
441 Harvard St., Brookline 734-5696.
This original 20-year-old Sicilian-style seafood & pasta restaurant is best known for its specialty-dassic calamari. The menu is based on traditional Sicilian recipes—synonymous with healthy eating. "For those of us who suffer from a clear addiction to shellfish and squid, the existence of the Daily Catch has been a source of comfort for many years," Robert Levey, The Boston Globe, December 1989.

DAVIO'S

269 Newbury St., 262-4810.
Royal Sonesta Hotel, 5 Cambridge Parkway, Cambridge, 661-4810
202 Washington Street, Brookline Village, 738-4810.
Davio's in Boston captures the flavor of Newbury Street. Experience the finest in Northern Italian dining in a cozy, friendly setting where uniquely prepared homemade pasta, veal and seafood dishes are specialties. The Brookline location is in the heart of quaint Brookline Village, and the Cambridge restaurant overlooks the Charles River. Wherever you are in the Boston area, one of Davio's three distinctive restaurants is only minutes away.

DICK'S LAST RESORT

55 Huntington Ave., Boston, 267-8080.
Major credit cards accepted – Dick loves cash.
A restaurant (of sorts), Dick's has the kind of food that is not particularly fashionable and definitely not spa cuisine–buckets of messy ribs, chicken, catfish, shrimp, lobster and crab legs, served on butcher paper. There are also 74 kinds of beer for the novice or serious sudsman. Dick's has obnoxious live classic rock, rhythm & blues and Dixieland jazz seven nights a week, no cover charge, no dress code and certainly no class. On Sunday, Dick got religion and hired some gospel singers for a surprisingly good brunch from 10am to 3pm. A buffet full of goodies such as salads, hot entrées, omelet station, waffles, desserts and make-your-own sundae station. Dick's Last Resort is billed as "The shame of Boston's Back Bay" and an embarrassment to any neighborhood. Dick says, "Although the food is good and there's plenty of it, places with great food are a dime a dozen." It's the restaurant's style (or lack of it), loud music, wisecracking service people, bullyish doormen, and insulting promotional attitudes that raise eyebrows. Open Monday-Saturday from 11 a.m.-2 a.m., 10 a.m.-2 a.m. Sunday. Free parking after 5 p.m.

THE FISHERY

718 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge. 868-8800.
Major credit cards accepted.
Dock yourself at The Fishery's hand-crafted, boat-shaped raw bar or enjoy dinner in its casual, nautical dining room. The Fishery's own pan-fried crab cakes rival Maryland's best. "Delicious pan-fried crab cakes." The Boston Herald.. The Boston Phoenix calls The Fishery "a local gem," and The Fishery Calamari "irresistibly addictive." The Fishery is proud to serve only the freshest, quality seafood. Specialties include: sour cream and mustard catfish, lemongrass mussels, southwestern shrimp, and a variety of grilled seafood. Open Monday-Friday from 11:30 a.m. to 10:30 p.m. and 12 p.m. to 10:30 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

THE FISH PIER

667 East Broadway, South Boston, 269-2111.
The largest selection of fresh, fried, baked, and broiled seafood and the friendliest service in South Boston characterize the Fish Pier restaurant. The menu also includes a multitude of chicken dishes, prime and BBQ ribs, sandwiches, salads, appetizers, chowders, and other hearty American fare. The ample portions of succulent sea scallops, fresh-from-the-sea fish, juicy prime rib, and other house specialties come at a price that will please your accountant. The Boston Globe's Cheap Eats reviewers rave about the Fish Pier). Mention the Improper Bostonian and enjoy a free appetizer with your dinner! Come down to South Boston's neighborhood mecca for fresh seafood or call up for delivery anywhere in Boston. Open for lunch and dinner: Monday and Tuesday 10:30 a.m.-9 p.m.; Wednesday-Saturday 10: 30 a.m.-10 p.m.; Sunday 12-9 p.m.

GANDHI RESTAURANT

The Original Sports Saloon
47 Huntington Ave, Boston, 536-1904
This neighborhood restaurant and bar is the only place to go in Boston to watch a sporting event. This establishment roars with excitement no matter which sport is showing on their five satellite TVs. As far as their menu, barbeque is the name of the game here; they do it differently than anyone else. All items are available for take-out and delivery. Open 7 days a week from 11 a.m.-2 a.m.

La Piccola Venezia
63 Salem Street, Boston, 523-9802.
No credit cards accepted.
Authentic home-style cooking in a casual, no frills environment. Blackboard menu, wine served in pitchers, and delicious Italian specialties make this one of the North End's most popular restaurants. The portions are large, the ambiance is bustling and friendly. Visit a favorite spot of the locals! Specialties include homemade soups, polenta, tripe, scungilli, baked caratelli, veal scallopini, and traditional pasta favorites. Hours 11:30 a.m. to 10 p.m. daily.

Poppa & Goose
69 First St., Cambridge, 497-6772.
Created by several Harvard, MIT, and Tufts alumni, Poppa & Goose's main mission is to serve as the link between the local community and Cambridge's greatest resource: the country's largest and most diverse international student population. The theme of the restaurant and market is to promote cultural awareness through culinary tradition. The menu attests to this theme, with its ever-growing variety of authentic international dishes contributed by students. The "Poppa & Goose Community Kitchen" is dedicated to cooking classes conducted by volunteering international students. Come and be chef for an evening; relax in the cheerful dining room and enjoy scrumptious food at reasonable prices; or take a Poppa & Goose kit home and effortlessly prepare an exotic dish in your own kitchen. Whether you are in the mood to eat, cook, or participate in cultural exchange, Poppa & Goose's door is open. Lunch 11 a.m.-3 p.m., Dinner 5:30-10 p.m. daily.

Positano
93 Salem St., North End, 367-4878.

Serving all traditional Indian dishes, Taj Mahal is the place to experience fine Indian cuisine. Enjoy traditional favorites such as chicken tandoori and thali (vegetarian and non-vegetarian available), or try one of the lamb, chicken, beef, seafood or vegetarian specialties. Taj Mahal's menu also includes a selection between south Indian offerings. If you're especially hungry for Indian food, and conscious of your wallet, try the all-you-can-eat buffet luncheon served from 12-3 p.m. for $5.95. Dinner is served 7 nights a week, 3-11 p.m. Take out and delivery is always available.

Third & Charles Bar & Grill
202 Third St.,Cambridge; Kendall Square, 547-9310.
Major credit cards accepted.
Don't let the name fool you; the T&C is a bit of Mexico moved to Cambridge. Featuring food "mild, hot, or insane," the menu includes everything from traditional tacos to the house specialty T&C pollo—a chicken breast with fresh mushrooms and bacon in a light sour cream sauce. To rinse it all down, try a brew from the extensive beer list, or a margarita in an exotic flavor like melon or black raspberry. Moderately priced with an extensive bar. For an atmosphere that is as lively and colorful as the food, stop by the T&C. Take out available. Serving food Monday-Wednesday from 11:30 a.m.-10 p.m.; until 11 p.m. Thursday-Sunday. Bar closes at 12:30 a.m.

Three Cheers Restaurant & Bar

93 bottles of beer on the Bennett Street wall

The Bennett Street Cafe at the Charles Hotel in Harvard Square has something new — a beer bar. The bar features 93 beers from around the world, from Thailand to Maine, and the selection includes lagers, pilsners, stouts, ales and even non-alcoholic beers. Guests are invited to record their travels with the bartender, who will track their adventures around the globe. The hotel also offers a beer brewed exclusively for the cafe by the Massachusetts Bay Brewing Co. A light lager nicknamed "#93," it is currently the No. 1-selling beer at Bennett Street Cafe. Lunch, dinner and Sunday brunch are available. For more information, call 661-5005.

Juicy Details

After changing several times, the name of Pat Lyons's re-entry into the restaurant scene is now Sonsie. Located on upper Newbury Street, the restaurant is scheduled to open in December. Coffee Cantata has opened on the corner of Centre and Pond streets in Jamaica Plain. This neighborhood coffee bar offers a selection of pastries, sandwiches and home-made muffins, plus an expanded menu with wonderful omelets on the weekends. The new Jae's Cafe is opening at 1281 Cambridge St. in Inman Square. This is the second location for the popular South End restaurant. The menu is a mixture of Asian cuisines and sushi, but unlike the first Jae's, this one offers full-liquor service. Paul O'Connell's new restaurant, Providence, will be opening soon in Brookline at 1223 Beacon St. The restaurant will have a cafe and a main dining room with a menu drawn from traditional European cuisines, but with a lighter touch and an American slant. Look for influences from Paul's previous employers: Olive's, Jasper's and East Coast Grill. Poppa & Goose has reopened after a week of renovations and has introduced a new menu, featuring a number of new noodle dishes and an interesting plate of Vietnamese treats called Miss Saigon Dim Sum. The prices are still incredibly low.

In the Kitchen

Congratulations to Barbara Lynch, new chef at Rocco's. Mark Orfaly is now a chef at Olive's and Andy Husbands steps into the position of executive chef at East Coast Grill. Andrew Wilkinson, executive chef at New York's Rainbow Room, will leave the Big Apple in January to become a partner in Skipjack's and Caffe Lampara. Rarities at the Charles Hotel has a new head chef, Richard Romaine.

Local Heroes

There was a little excitement recently at the Captain's Wharf restaurant in Brookline. A man came into the restaurant, snatched a woman's purse from the counter and ran out the door. John Rogaris, owner/manager, and two employees, Ken Taverna and Jaimy Sasso, pursued the man to his car. The alleged thief was so unnerved by the pursuit that he couldn't start his car and was forced to return the stolen purse. Regaining his nerve, he said he was armed and forced his pursuers to back off. The police had been called, and a high-speed chase the wrong way down Beacon Street resulted in the capture of the armed man, who is one of America's Most Wanted.

A Taste of New England

Boston University and the American Institute of Food and Wine are holding "Taste of New England" on Sunday, Nov. 21, at 808 Commonwealth Ave. from noon-5 p.m. Samples of regional specialty foods, confections, wines and beers will be offered and most products will be available for purchase. The entrance fee is $5. Cooking demonstrations are also scheduled from11 a.m. to 4 p.m.for an admission charge of $10. Reservations are recommended for the hour-long demonstrations conducted by such culinary stars as Julia Child, Jacques Pepin, Nina Simonds and Jasper White. Also, throughout the day, dozens of cookbook authors will be stopping in to autograph their books, which will be on sale at discounted prices from Jessica's Biscuit. Call 353-9852 for more information.

Homegrown Thanksgiving

And while we're on the subject of a taste of New England, plenty of local products are available for Thanksgiving. Massachusetts's parsnips, turnips and squash are abundant; cranberries are plentiful in spite of the shortage of rain this summer,; and the state boasts more than 23 turkey farms. If you would like information on where to find these products, contact the Massachusetts Department of Agriculture's office. ❑

LONG DIVISION

"... When I look at what I'm doing with my life, I can't figure what it all adds up to. But I can still do Division 16..."

All right. It is time for me to get off the couch. There's only so much Home Shopping channel to which you can submit yourself and still be labeled a sane human being. But I need to ease myself back into the ebb and flow of nightlife. I need to start someplace kind of fun but casual, where I can be entertained, but not really feel the need to do anything more energetic than lift my mongo-sized grape crush to my parched lips. Now where would that place be? Let me just whip out my pocket calculator, throw in some figures and... hmm, let's see. This is difficult because I've forgotten just about all the math I ever learned in school. I sure as hell can't balance my checkbook; I have to use all my fingers and toes to figure out how many drinks I've had (and let me tell you, that's not always such a sure-fire system, either), and when I look at what I'm doing with my life, I can't figure what it all adds up to. But I can still do Division.

IF YOU GO

DIVISION 16

955 BOYLSTON ST.
LAST CALL: 2 a.m.

In a town of ever-changing restaurants and clubs, Division 16 has been around long enough to qualify as a Boston landmark. For those of you who don't get out much, Division is located in the old Division 16 police station (Hence the name – get it?), next to the Institute of Contemporary Art. The funky art-deco decor and the black-clad, extremely hip staff make this place a couple of notches cooler than your average Boston bar. The fact that it serves food from its huge menu (including the best buffalo wings in Boston) until 1:30 a.m. doesn't hurt, either.

As with several other spots around town, Division has been somewhat appropriated by the Euro crowd. This has its good points and its drawbacks. On the plus side, the Euro kids have decided that Division is the place to go on the nights when all their other hangouts are closed, namely Sunday and Monday. So, if you're looking for a crowded place to go on a Monday night when every other bar in town has tumbleweeds blowing through it, head to Division's Cafe Olé night. The whole bar turns into a kind of cabaret/club with a live merengue band and a DJ. The music is good and the crowd is enthusiastic, buying continual rounds of shots for each other and kiss-kissing away.

On the down side, you have to be prepared to mingle with a lot of extremely rich kids from Third World countries who think that they've been given the key to the city and always seem genuinely shocked to discover that there are actually people in Boston, at this moment, who have to work for a living! But if you can handle doing colossal California Hot Tubs from the oversized martini glasses while wallowing in the smoky international atmosphere punctuated by cries of "Achmed! José! We must do shots! Shots everyone!" while the light glints off the platinum cards, then you shouldn't have a problem.

If you think that the Euro crowd might be a bit overwhelming, take heart: Wednesday nights are Blues nights at Division, and you can chill over nachos while you listen to the live house band and mingle with a more Bostonian crowd. Whatever night you choose to go, the crowd is always good, the wings are hot, and the grape crushes are big enough to do the backstroke in. When you add up your nightlife options, you just might have to do Division. ❑

MANN AT WORK

"...Aimee Mann has endured her share of heartache, including a legal battle to win release from 'Til Tuesday's Epic label. But in Whatever, Mann has made the album she wanted..."

Aimee Mann's Whatever is filled with bittersweet lyrics on the subject of relationships. Yet the record — a candidate for pop album of the year — brims with a sense of charm and optimism.

The singer/songwriter, formerly of 'Til Tuesday, says, "A lot of that is [thinking] `Listen, things may be awful, and we don't know what's going to happen. We don't know what's going to happen with this record. But we have a couple of mellotrons and life is beautiful.'"

Mann has endured her share of heartache, including a legal battle to win release from 'Til Tuesday's Epic label. But with financing from her manager before she signed with Imago, Mann made the album she wanted, with multi-instrumentalist Jon Brion handling production.

She still doesn't know what will ultimately happen with Whatever, which has sold about 100,000 copies in the United States — a tally far short of what the record deserves. But after spending much of the summer in Europe (the album went Top 40 in England), Mann is finally touring here. Her Nov. 12 concert at Avalon is her first local date since she played last spring on the roof of Strawberries in Kenmore Square.

"You have to support your own record," says Mann, citing conflicting strategies with her manager and label over the timing for a tour. "You can't just wait for things to happen on their own."

She'll be coming back to town with a band that features Bostonians Clayton Scoble on guitar, Brian Stevens (ex-Cavedogs) on bass and Milt Sutton on drums, as well as XTC guitarist Dave Gregory.

Gregory attended one of Mann's shows in England and joined her band onstage. After the concert, over dinner, she "asked him if he was the one [in XTC] who didn't like touring, and he said, `Oh no, I like touring.' And I said, `How would you like to do some of it with me?'"

Certainly Mann shares XTC's stylistic debt to the Beatles. "A lot of it is more directly influenced by people who are influenced by the Beatles, so there's a lot of Badfinger and Kinks and that sort of sound," Mann says, on the phone from a tour stop in England.

On Whatever, "Way Back When" summons "Penny Lane"-like trumpet sounds, while "Mr. Harris" mimics the Beatles in its string section. However, an even bigger twist is an appearance by guitarist Roger McGuinn, quoting his own Byrds licks in "Couldn't Been Anyone."

Mann says she and producer Brion are both "very fond of quoting other things that don't necessarily apply to a particular song. It's just sort of fun to have reference points from other songs."

AIMEE MANN: The Former 'Til Tuesday singer heads home from her European tour to play at Avalon Nov. 12.

Brion also laced Whatever with the sounds of several antique keyboards, but none of the icing distracts from Mann's winsome songs. "Jon and I have this concept of arranging, which is perpetual melody," she says. "When the melody or the vocal stops, something else should come up and continue the melodic idea. But that's always in the service of the song. It's never in the service of showing off what a great player you are. And we have a lot of odd instruments that we use, but the sounds are always chosen as a support."

On the road, Mann will be supported mainly by guitars, the primary instrument heard on Whatever. She will be singing songs from that album — and from 'Til Tuesday. "We'll ruin `Voices Carry' as much as we can," she wryly promises of her former band's signature hit.

ELSEWHERE — What is it about these Friday nights? Aimee Mann arrives on the same night as the Bulgarian Women's Choir at Sanders Theater; Tuck & Patti and Mary Black in separate shows at Berklee; Col. Bruce Hampton & the Aquarium Rescue Unit at the Paradise; and, of course, Nirvana at the Wallace Civic Center in Fitchburg. Whew! For a more clear-cut concert decision, check out enchanting, eclectic Canadian songstress Jane Siberry at the Charles Playhouse Nov. 15. ❑

Classical Music / M. T. Anderson

Uncommonly Good

"...Perfect programs for adventurous casual listeners sick of the bombast of the romantic symphony..."

Symphony orchestras make a lot of noise. It's hard to overlook a symphony orchestra, even in a pretty big room with the lights out. However, a lot of Boston's musical life goes unseen; even though there are exciting and unusual programs out there beckoning - very quietly - the casual classical listener.

Chamber music, for example, often reveals a far more intimate and intense side of composers known for big orchestral works. A perfect example is Dmitri Shostakovich — who spent much of his life in a grueling tug of war with Stalin, forced to produce bright-eyed propaganda for the Russian public — secretly expressed his rawer, more tender feelings in an exquisite string of chamber works. Members of the Boston Chamber Music Society will perform his last chamber work, "The Sonata for Violin and Piano, Op. 147," at Jordan Hall on Nov. 19 and at Sanders Theater on Nov. 21. The other pieces on the program include Dvorak's "Viola Quintet, Op. 97," one of Dvorak's delightful postcards from America, and Erno Dohnanyi's "Sextet" of 1935, a slightly denser and more challenging work. This nicely varied concert is sure to be played with the BCMS's characteristic flair - for tickets, call (617) 422-0086.

If modern music offends your ear or exacerbates your corns, several upcoming events promise topnotch performances of earlier chamber works. World-famous violinist Monica Huggett and guitarist Richard Savino will be giving a recital of fiery little works by Italian virtuosi such as Corelli and Paganini. Composers such as these were always larger than life, expected to scribble music that would showcase their instruments' abilities to blare, sing, hop and leap in somersaults of almost inhuman agility. Paganini's playing was always likened to fireworks and religious experience. The concert will be held at the Old West Church in Boston on Dec. 3. For tickets and information, call (617) 661-1812. On the afternoon of Nov. 14, world-class cellist Anner Bylsma will be giving a performance of three of Bach's fine cello suites (Nos. 1, 3, and 6) at the Museum of Fine Arts. These Bach works have always been known for their incredible compression: One driven line paints whole worlds. Visit the museum first, glut yourself on the fleshy Rubens and ecstatic cherubs, then enjoy these austere and noble works as a cool post-prandial sherbet. For information, call (617) 267-9300, x300 during business hours.

Our local conservatories and colleges often sponsor very impressive concerts. A random upcoming example: The Longy School of Music will present soprano Jayne West and pianist Robert Merfield in a program of art-songs, featuring Schumann's lovely Liederkreis, a series of haunting images recounted by a wanderer in a mythical wood. This strange, neo-symbolist song cycle — sort of what if Franz Schubert went hiking with Franz Kafka — will be paired with various intelligently chosen art-songs by Debussy, Faure, Mendelssohn and Wolf on Nov. 19 in the Edward Pickman Concert Hall. For information, call (617) 876-0956, x130.

For those in the mood for an unusual (even bizarre) choral evening, I have two suggestions in the upcoming month: On Nov. 12 the fantastic Bularian women's choir Le Mystere Des Voix Bulgares will appear at Sanders Theater. You may laugh; you may say that if you've hear one a cappella Bulgarian women's choir, you've heard them all; but, in fact, the exotic, piercing quality of these voices, the strikingly alien harmonies they produce, will fascinate people interested in world music, classical music and jazz. They may be mysterious, but not so mysterious they don't have a telephone number: (617) 496-2222.

And, second on our list of unusual choral evenings, a performance of Handel's oratorio Saul with time for a fine dinner at a local restaurant between "Parts I" and "II." Saul is a political potboiler of love, war and torrid palace intrigue. The young shepherd David returns to the capital, having just triumphantly slain Goliath (the giant, not the animated Lutheran dog). Amid parades and ceremonies, the Israelites sing David's praises. In fact, they sing them at such length that King Saul gets jealous and irritable. His mood doesn't improve when David and Saul's son, Jonathan, declare that they feel a love passing the love of women. That's when pointed weapons become involved. Handel's psychological masterpiece will be performed by the Boston Cecilia on Nov. 21 at Jordan Hall. Reserve seats for dinner at a local restaurant; it promises to be an evening to remember. For tickets and information, call (617) 232-4540.

These are perfect programs for adventurous casual listeners sick of the bombast of the romantic symphony, that staple of America's musical diet. Try something a little unusual. You'll be pleasantly surprised. ❑

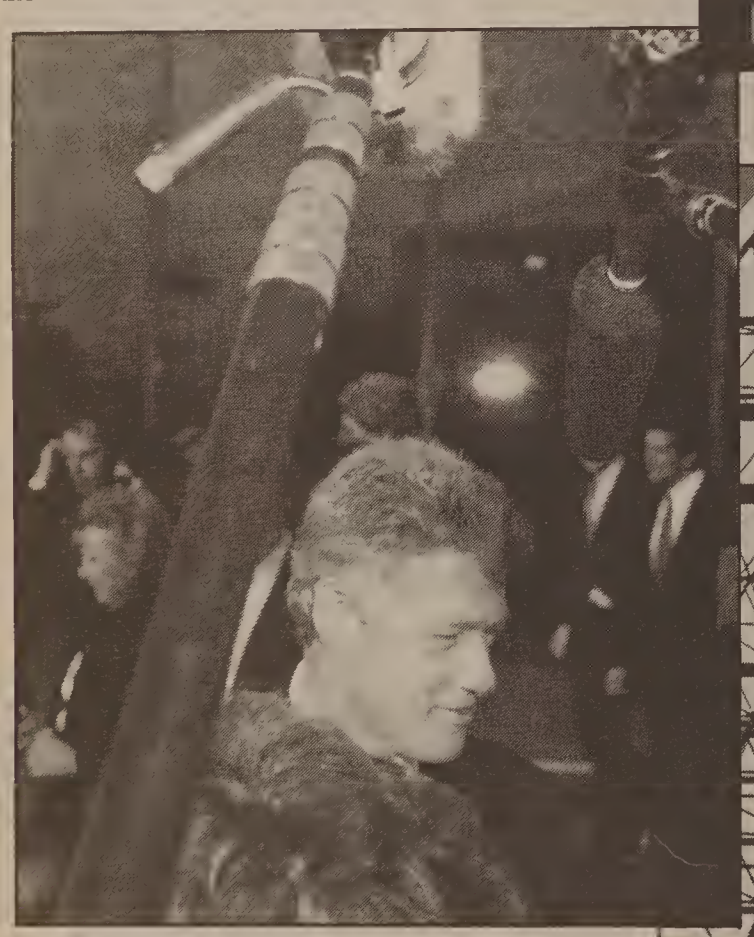
"Rememberance of a Legacy"

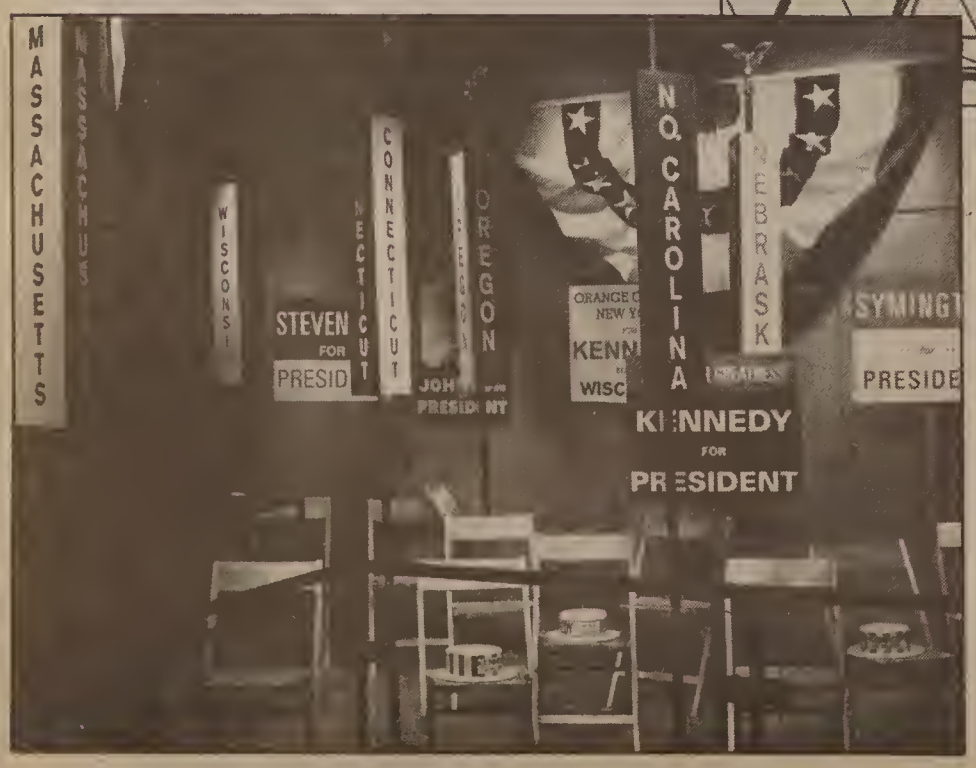
By Gina Benedict



"We celebrate the past to awaken the future," John F. Kennedy's words on the 25th anniversary of the signing of the Social Security Act came alive once again during the opening of the new museum at the Kennedy Library. On Oct. 29, President Clinton and members of the Kennedy family joined to dedicate the museum, which helps visitors experience the political and personal life of President Kennedy. The exhibits re-create the excitement surrounding Kennedy's campaign, the influence of his commitment to volunteer service, and the legacy that surrounds his thousand-day reign as president.

"Most visitors to the library hadn't been born during my father's presidency," said Caroline B. Kennedy, "and we decided that the best way for younger people to learn about this important time in history was to experience it through his own words. This is not a shrine, it is a remembrance of a legacy."

President Clinton touched on the legacy of the Kennedy administration in his dedication speech: "We must invest in our future and shape the events to come instead of allowing to be shaped by them. This museum proves that one person can make a difference."



The John F. Kennedy Library and Museum: Morrissey Avenue, next to UMass-Boston, Dorchester, overlooking the Boston Harbor. Hours are 9 a.m.-5 p.m. daily, and admission is $6 for adults, $4 for seniors and students. Call 929-4523 for more information.

ROCKIE HOROSCOPE

BY ROCKIE GARDINER

NOVEMBER 10-23, 1993

GENERAL FORECAST (If you know your ascendant, read it too)

Advance notica that retrograde Mercury is turning direct could come days before the actual event, Monday at 12:39 a.m. If your phone, fax and car are already acting strange, if you're getting lots of hangups, this is why. Another set of weirdnesses may appear with the partial solar eclipse (wa see nada) Saturday afternoon during the Scorpio new moon. Paople with 21 degreas Scorpio, Taurus, Leo or Aquarius prominent in their natal charts can get a serious case of the creeps, but nobody escapes the tough square between the sun and sad Saturn on Tuesday. That much depression and sense of loss is hard to avoid. What we'll do instead is "process" (what does that really mean?) during Wadnesday's potent sun-Pluto conjunction. More about rebuilding, rehabilitation and rascue missions. A year from now, the next time the sun and Pluto meet, there'll be visible benefits from Jupiter's transit of Scorpio, but until then take comfort in the fact that the worst of this annus horribilus is over and, except for some grief as '94 begins, the holiday season will be a happy one. Sagittarius, the party sign, starts on Monday the 22nd at 2 a.m.

ARIES (MARCH 20-APRIL 19)

All relatively quiet on the relationship front, particularly if you can rise above a partner's petty jealousy or obvious manipulations. You know that while your Mars ruler is in high-minded, high-flying Sag, you don't have to stoop to conquer or to prevail, either. The new moon ushers in another round of money matters, e.g. checking out other people's resources. And Mercury's tumaround signals much batter communication, maybe even a contract with significant others. Sign and sigh in relief.

TAURUS (APRIL 20-MAY 20)

You can pretty much abdicate and let someone else run your life. While such an abundance of Scorpionic action dominates the week, all you can reasonably do is pay attention or court — if the situation calls for it — your allies. Let them work out any difficulties you may encounter with a client or your boss. This time Taurean charm, honesty and determination amounts to zilch. However, you can't let a partner's paranoia on Wednesday turn those allies into adversaries. Vigilance!

GEMINI (MAY 21-JUNE 20)

Getting a bit intense about your pleasures? Is recreation more important than work? Now that your Mercury ruler, in your housa of fun and games, is turning direct, it's almost safe to maka plans for the holidays. (Give it a few days to gain momentum.) But keep in mind that the Scorpio new moon takes place in your house of work and service, so you could wind up baing busier than ever during the next threa lunar months. If that prospect scares you, carefully watch what happens on Wednesday. Time to bail?

CANCER (JUNE 21-JULY 22)

New moon and if not a new romance, than more juice added to an old one. Why you should grow horns out of the blue and act like a green-eyed monster is but one of the mysteries Scorpio periodically lays on you. Solving it, however could be fascinating, and a little scary. Just be careful and take the necessary precautions. Once a Crab descends into the pit of passion, thoughts of safety are left behind. A walk on the wild side can turn into a trek through the dark side. What if you suddenly want out?

LEO (JULY 23-AUG. 22)

You're not a peripheral player this week, not by a long shot. (Incidentally, that good-luck vibe is still hanging around you.) When your sun ruler is eclipsed (partially) by tha Scorpio moon on Saturday, expect a visitor from the past, one of the architects of your lifestyle, perhaps a contributor to the Leo sense of noblesse oblige. By Wednesday, it could be a cathartic experience. Try spilling your guts (in a regal way, of course) to this co-star to resolve lingering differences.

VIRGO (AUG. 23-SEPT. 22)

Detail-driven fanatics should know that the new moon kicks in Saturday at 4:34 p.m. so your little rituals must be timed correctly. Maybe a ceremony will put you back on track, maybe your Mercury ruler's turnaround will do the trick. Maybe not. Don't force movement or decisions quite yet; everything in its own rhythm, even if you feel stymied while the sun squares Saturn early in the week. Go to confession on Wednesday to relieve your sense of sin and impending exposure.

LIBRA (SEPT. 23-OCT. 22)

Excuse me, but it's totally personal. Nothing that happens this week falls outside the boundaries of your limited interests — your ego, finances, history, homelife and creative block. But mainly it's your money scene that dominates your waking-and-sleeping thoughts. How to crash through this feeling that you're being restricted? Wait until Wednesday, when the Scorpio sun meets powerful Pluto, to discover which road to recovery best suits your purposes; what investigation will yield the most-telling results.

SCORPIO (OCT. 23-NOV. 21)

The pressure doesn't let up this week. Even though tha rest of the signs get some relief, you're stuck in the depths of a personal decision. And there you'll remain until (1) your Scorpio new moon wish (and accompanying ritual) takes hold, (2) the sun tests Saturn and tha anxieties you harbor about where home should be, and (3) your Pluto co-ruler merges with the sun's creative force to renew your energy vortex. Once again you rise like the phoenix from the ashes of another burnout. Happy re-Birthday.

SAGITTARIUS (NOV. 22-DEC. 21)

You're wandering through a strange landscape, not unlike Your Own Private Twilight Zone, where your senses don't seem to ba working properly, where what mattars is what happens out of sight, out of earshot. And while you're not totally at the mercy of hidden forces, that funny smell really could be a rat. Better to trust an acquaintance's information (once Mercury is moving forward), than sit and stew in your own juices, fomenting plans of vengeance. Get through tha nasty stuff and forget it.

CAPRICORN (DEC. 22-JAN. 20)

No paranoia this week — for a change, your anxieties are based in reality, albeit astrological reality. But after you face the problem — probably generated by a so-called friend — when the sun squares your Saturn ruler, you will have something to show for it. Saturn in your money house all year keeps testing your sense of values, making you redefine, over and over, just what it is you want. Probably to have it out with that so-called friend on Wednesday. New info and a young confidant after Mercury goes direct.

AQUARIUS (JAN. 21-FEB. 18)

Being honored on Veteran's Day for a job well done? Something interesting, new or offbeat could happen as the week begins, affecting your status and your place in the world beyond the office. Then, when the sun pressures Saturn in your sign, you might feel threatened, unsure of yourself. How odd! Meet this challenge as best you can, but don't get too involved in the coming and goings (more likely goings) of powerful people on your scene. The situation fixes itself early next year.

PISCES (FEB. 19-MARCH 19)

The new moon in your ninth house of philosophy and foreign affairs can evoke higher thoughts from your higher mind. Or is that an English import who's giving you ideas? If you think smart is sexy, and who doesn't?, you'll get quite turned on this weekend. Plus Mercury turning direct in your house of sex and other mysteries of life further confuses tha issues — is it your brain or your body, your sense organs or your soul going through this Scorpionic transformation. Mmmmm.

Their Secret Gardens

A group of nine women — a rainbow of ages, ethnicities and, given the subject and the times in which we live, of sexual orientations and experiences — were filmed talking about sex by an all-women crew during a weekend retreat. Amazingly matter of fact though these women are discussing orgasms, masturbation, the pleasure of foreplay, sex toys, bisexuality, and the sometimes-elusive nature of desire, the trusting-group ethos also casts a warm blanket of support around the women; more than one cry when mentioning incest and the long shadow it has cast across their sexuality. There's also facts-of-life discussion and pajama-party-style hilarity, which remind you that the participants like each other and are having fun doing this. In lyrical moments, the art of the kiss, of lying together and of skin are celebrated. One of the women virtually chugs with joy as she talks about how she loves to feel "full, hot, sweaty and passionate" with a man, and that an indispensable part of sex is having the man make her laugh. Another reports that sex and feeling sexy can hibernate, like a bear, and come back to life in the spring. One woman whose mother told her sex is great but wouldn't accept her daughter's hugs hints at the weird ways that sex and affection can be disconnected. The video, a frank model for further frankness, can be rented to stimulate — there's a word — discussion among other women, or as a once-removed way to talk to men.

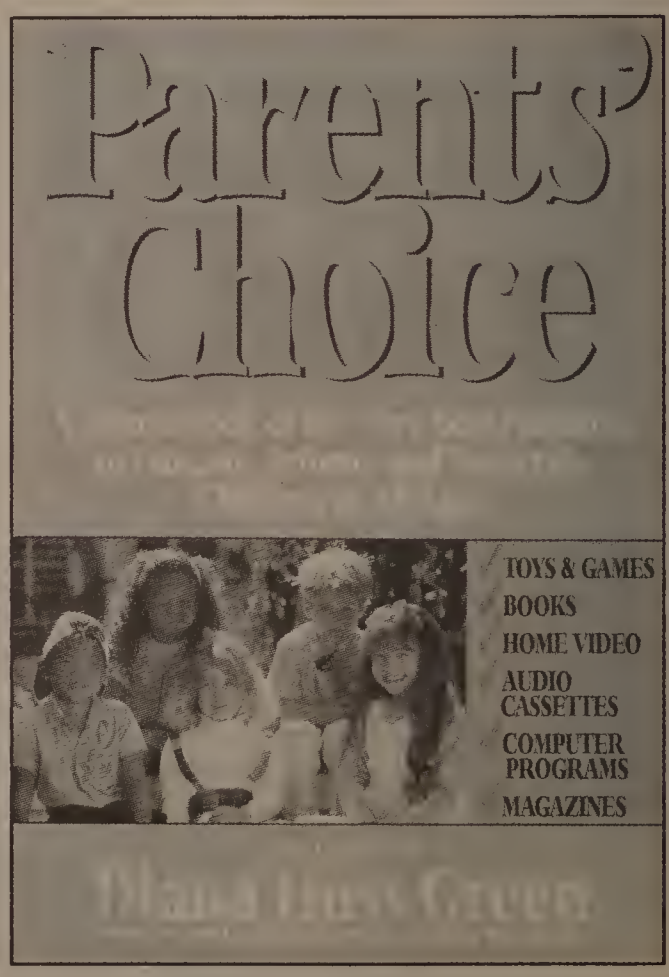
East Feast



Prem-La, a Nepalese store that opened in Cambridge 15 years ago and proceeded to emigrate around the city, is now back on Mass. Ave near Harvard Square. Flavorful and exotic, and serving as a community center for Nepalese festivals and events, Prem-La has a series of impressive and large Buddha statues, including Luxmi, consort of Vishnu and the goddess of wealth, and a White Tara and a Green Tara. These sister statues preside with a serene and mysterious air. Smaller and more readily affordable are sculptures of Ganesh (of the elephant face); indigenous artifacts, such as clay bowls with an imposing dragon curling around the rim; and tangerine-colored wooden dragons, which hang from the ceiling. Shadow puppets representing Hindu characters are made of leather so thin it seems papery. At the intersection between religion and modern meditation are cymbals that, once struck, emit tension-reducing emanations of sound. Similarly, the singing bowl's ring, produced by passing a stick around the edge, becomes louder and louder; apparently the sound, when made by a monastery full of monks, resembles voices. Turn a rainstick upside down and hear the muted musical tumblings of thousands of seeds — nature imitating nature. Also offered are colorful, traditionally woven, hand-knit sweaters and sturdy-cotton backpacks with webbed handles, available for $20-$25. Yak-wool sherpa jackets make for outdoor attire of very, very eastern-mountain sports.

Children's books and toys proliferate at such a rate that it's tough for parents to know what's what — not to mention what's interesting, worthwhile, attractive, safe, nourishing and fun for kids. To sort through the broad range and allure of high-quality products and the shrillness of the tacky end, the magazine Parents Choice, the Michelin in this field for 15 years, has compiled selections, reviews and honors of the best. Editor Diana Huss Green has made your Christmas shopping easier and quicker by compiling a sourcebook of the best in the land of books, audio cassettes, videos, toys, computer programs and magazines, arranged according to the age of the child. And while your fingers are doing the walking , you can also inform yourself — as all good parents should — about the broad range of top-of-the-line valuable products in each category (for example, books with backbone and with the stature to become classics). Thanks to the listed addresses and phone numbers, you can call the companies to find out where products are sold or to order. Green's style is clear, crisp and readable. Her passion and delight in these products worthy of her imprimatur sings off the pages.

Piano Forte

Not one to soft-pedal her complex-and-primal view of female sexuality, Jane Campion delivers another strong, beautiful film in The Piano. This time, the New Zealand director joins forces with American actors Holly Hunter and Harvey Keitel to explore a love story that counterpoints a sexual triangle and a piano.

CITY RAVE

WHAT'S HOT IN BOSTON NOW

BY JENNIFER KORNREICH

TELEVISION

Here's a fantastic phenomenon that makes you glad to be alive in the Age of Information and in Beantown at the same time: Boston is the first city to carry 21st Century Vaudeville as a commercial venture. The offspring of Telemorphix — a company that advocates non-brain-dead TV and operates through "virtual space" (the network of its international employees' personal computers and modems) — Vaudeville brings a new dimension to interactive media. While the technology is staggering, all you need is your trusty boob tube and a phone. Viewers who call in to the show literally become the program's writers, directors and actors via animated surrogate characters that they control. After 15 minutes of tutelage in the "electronic green room," viewers may pick a digital puppet from the show's database, have a new, impromptu character drawn, or even send in their own drawing to be animated. Participants can sing, discuss pop culture, perform comic sketches, rattle off poetry, and do anything their inspired hearts desire. Between these animated, improvised skits, the show broadcasts videos submitted by viewers (any format except porn) and other experimental stuff, such as a cleaned-up version of underground-circus proprietor Jim Rose's self-mutilation sideshow. Truly a pioneer in the medium, Vaudeville airs on Monday nights from 9 to 10 on Channel 62. It's high-tech fantasy for the low-tech average Joe.

Welcome to 21st Century Vaudeville

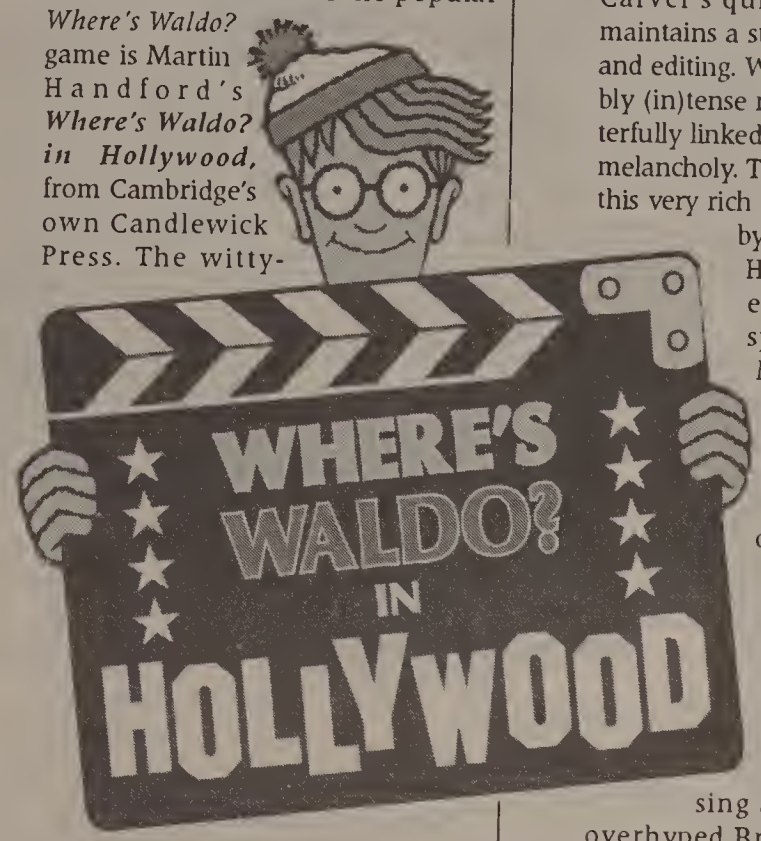
VINTAGE

Sick of seeing T&A on booze commercials? Guys, don't lie to me; you probably aren't. Well, anyway, if by some miracle of God you are — or you're just a hooch aficionado (I know there are quite a few of you out there) — haul your lush-ous selves over to The Nostalgia Factory (336 Newbury St.; 236-8754). Through Nov. 30, the Factory is featuring an exhibit of more than 200 original beer-and-wine ads, from the late-19th century through the early '70s. The best part: if you wish, a one-of-a-kind period piece can be yours for only $6-$14. Notable among the "Lost Weekend" finds is a Miller ad featuring a family, grandparents and all, enjoying a football game and their favorite fermented stuff. Interesting family values.

BOOK

Miami Herald columnist and investigative reporter Carl Hiaasen explores strangeness in Florida and satirizes Congress in his best seller, Strip Tease (Knopf, $21). It's hard to say which aspect of this loopy novel is more fun: the characters or the hyperactive prose. With wicked precision, Hiaasen interweaves the lives of a slew of go-go dancers (one named Urbana Sprawl), a misanthropic bouncer, a wayward Congressman (gee, imagine that), a political fixer aptly named Moldy, and a voyeur called Mr. Peepers. An amazingly rare-quality read; you laugh while your brain cells devour the intelligence contained within these pages.



Mr. Louise Erdrich is finally making a name of his own in the literary world. Working Men (Henry Holt, $19.95) is Michael Dorris's first anthology, and an impressive one at that. Don't let the title fool you: these stories encompass all sorts of characters, from the turn-of-the-century mother who loses her favorite son in a freak accident, to the loafing ex-football player who finds himself with an inscrutable wife and a job teaching French (which he doesn't speak). Dorris tends to write very, very quietly, but the sweetness of his imagery and the pensive insights that float throughout the work more than make up for the lack of verve.

SCIENCE

Feeling a little more cerebral than usual? Want to expand your mind — literally? Through Jan. 2, the Museum of Science (Science Park, 589-0250) offers an in-depth exhibit of the brain's biology and workings called It's All in Your Head. The exhibit features a 9-foot replica of the brain, cortical twists and all. Walk through and examine it from different angles. There are all sorts of hands-on devices, computer games and interactive-video programs, in addition to various types of intelligence tests (spatial, linguistic, musical). A fascinating exhibit for those of us who find it all too easy to forget that even the rush-hour drivers on Storrow have this vital organ.

KIDDIE CORNER

The newest version of the popular Where's Waldo? game is Martin Handford's Where's Waldo? in Hollywood, from Cambridge's own Candlewick Press. The witty-and-complex illustrations bring the simple scan-and-find format to life. The movie sets include a silent film, a western and an epic-adventure flick. Searching for various Waldo characters and props from among the impossibly crowded throngs will necessitate the kids' attention for so long that you might even have a chance to flip through a magazine before hearing your name called again.

FILM

The holiday-movie boom is upon us! But while most of the newer flicks are merely exploding the box office, Short Cuts is still making tongues wag with its ambitious scope. 1993 has been a banner year for short fiction, and cinema's mainstream attempt to co-opt the form is done masterfully in this long-(three hours)-but-always-compelling film. Loosely based on Raymond Carver's short stories, Short Cuts follows the incidental links between no-less-than-22 protagonists. Although Altman's been blasted for mutilating Carver's quiet work, the director maintains a steady hand in his pacing and editing. What results is an incredibly (in)tense movie, replete with masterfully linked images and Los Angeles melancholy. The casting is the icing on this very rich cake: Look for star turns by Lily Tomlin, Tom Waits, Huey Lewis (yes, really, even obsolescence spurned him), Frances McDormand and Lyle Lovett. Robert Altman's magnifying glass blows up ordinary people like so many ants on a hot summer day. Find out what all the fuss is about.

CHEESE

If you're tired of the usual dueling-piano bars but you want to sing along to wretchedly overhyped Broadway show tunes, check out the Masquerade Cabaret at the Roxy (279 Tremont St.; 361-7024; 227-ROXY). A local troupe of singers and dancers, members from the Riverside Theater Works, sashay through everything from Andrew Lloyd Webber to Fats Domino to Madonna. The songs, sets and costumes change every show so that no two are alike. Tickets are $15; doors open at 7 every Thursday, Friday and Saturday evening through Dec. 11.

WRITING

The Sunday Muse is a non-profit organization that emphasizes the process of writing rather than the finished product itself. Attention is given to works-in-progress so that all you would-be Naylors and Mailers out there can get feedback as you go. Readings are held Sunday evenings from 6:30 to 8 at the Claddagh Restaurant (113 Dartmouth St.; 262-9874). Local established writers participate regularly (Anne Bernays, BU's Barbara Hyett, Tuft's Jonathan Strong), but unknowns are always welcome. Admission is free and dinner and drinks are available for those willing to shell out some minor bucks. Call 542-2711 for information.

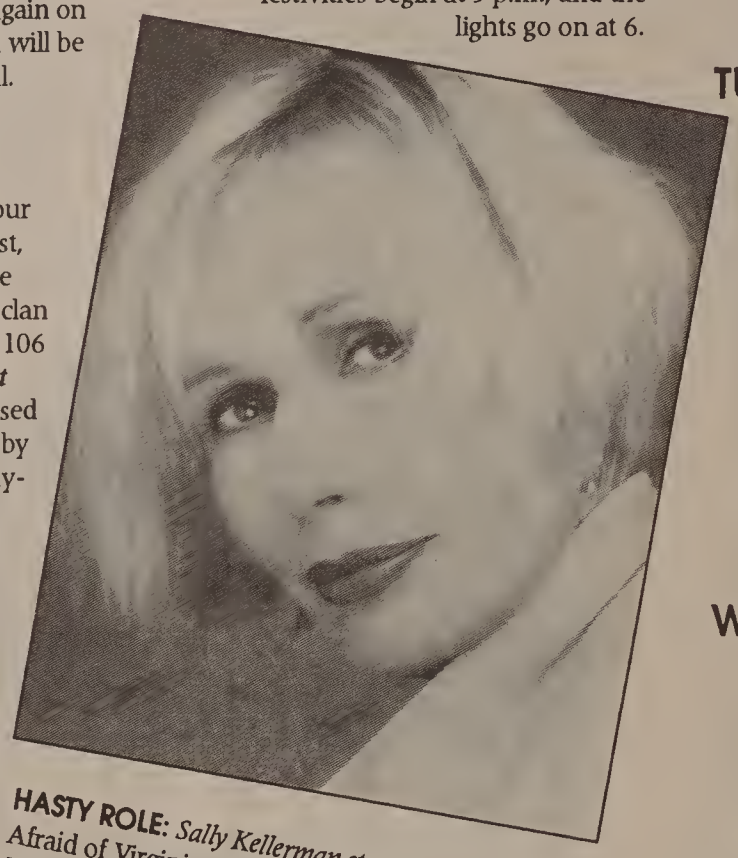
TWO WEEKS WORTH OF IMPROPER PICKS

WEDNESDAY



24 Andre Previn conducts cellist Wendy Warner and the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight at 8 and again on Nov. 26 and 27. The program will be Haydn and Mozart. Delightful. Call 266-1200.

THURSDAY

25 After finishing your Thanksgiving feast, why not leave the dishes until later and trot the clan over to the Colonial Theater (106 Boylston St.) to see The Secret Garden. This hit musical is based on the classic children's book by Frances Hodgson Burnett. Playing at 7:30 p.m through Nov. 28. Call 931-2787.

FRIDAY

26 It's that time of year again! The Boston Ballet's production of The Nutcracker is the most popular in the world (a record audience of 140,000 is expected), and it starts tonight at the Wang Center, 270 Tremont St., at 7:30 p.m. This is a not-to-be-missed highlight of the holiday season in Boston. Call 931-ARTS.

HASTY ROLE: Sally Kellerman stars in Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?, playing at the Hasty Pudding Theatre through Nov. 28.

SATURDAY

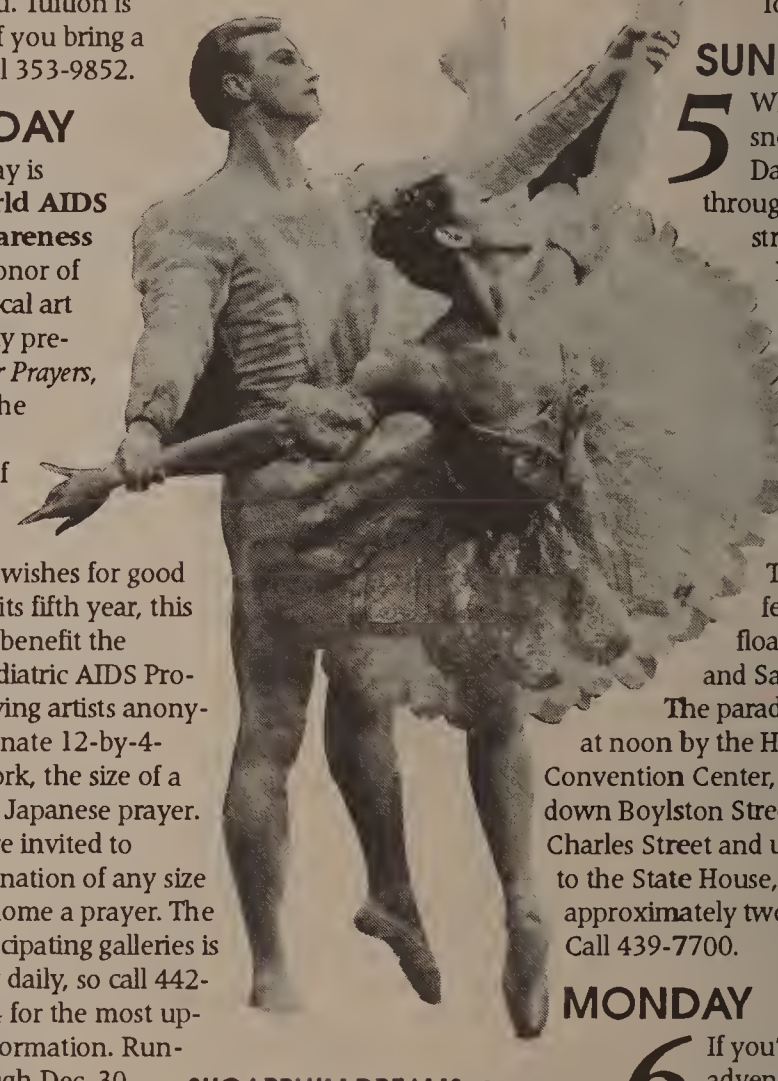
27 The Cambridge Theater Company's final performances of Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?, starring Sally Kellerman (of *M*A*S*H* fame), are tonight and tomorrow night at the Hasty Pudding Theater, 12 Holyoke St., in Harvard Square. Call for times and tickets: 496-8400.

SUNDAY

28 What's 91 feet high and glows? The nation's tallest Christmas tree, of course. Join Boston Bruins-center Adam Oates and WBZ's Tom Bergeron for the lighting of the Brickstone tree in Brickstone Square, Andover. The festivities begin at 5 p.m., and the lights go on at 6.

If you go, bring an unwrapped toy to donate to Toys for Tots. Sponsored by Marshalls and Brickstone Square. Call (508) 749-3008 for information and directions.

MONDAY



29 If you happen to be in the downtown area today, why not take a stroll through Winter Wonderland on the Boston Common? For 30 days (Nov. 26-Dec. 26) the Common will be transformed into a holiday paradise, with a petting zoo, sleigh rides, gingerbread houses and even Frosty himself on hand! Open Monday-Saturday, 11 a.m -7 p.m., and Sunday, noon-7 p.m. Tickets are $4 for children ages 4-12 and senior citizens, and $6 for adults. Children under 4 get in free. Call (800) 8-WONDER.

TUESDAY

30 No drink can quite compare with champagne when it comes to being festive. Tonight, the Boston University Wine Club presents a demonstration pairing the wine with finger food, from 6-8 p.m. in Room 117, 808 Comm. Ave. Raymond Ost of Boston's Meridien Hotel and Jean-Louis Carbonnier of the Champagne News and Information Bureau will be there. So should you. Tuition is $30, $25 if you bring a friend. Call 353-9852.

WEDNESDAY

1 Today is World AIDS Awareness Day. In honor of this, the local art community presents Paper Prayers, based on the Japanese tradition of offering painted prayers as wishes for good health. In its fifth year, this event will benefit the Boston Pediatric AIDS Project by having artists anonymously donate 12-by-4-inch artwork, the size of a traditional Japanese prayer. Viewers are invited to make a donation of any size and take home a prayer. The list of participating galleries is expanding daily, so call 442-8800 x204 for the most up-to-date information. Running through Dec. 30.

SUGARPLUM DREAMS: Susanna Vennerbeck and Roland Price rehearse a scene from the Boston Ballet's Nutcracker, at the Wang Center through Jan. 2.

THURSDAY

2 If you have a penchant for the unique, check out the Boston Public Library's "Discovery Concert Series." The series features musical gems discovered in the BPL's Brown Collection of 19th-and-20th-century manuscripts and first-edition publications. Today at 2 p.m., the Calumet Quintet performs an unpublished-and-previously unperformed piece by Luigi Boccherini in the Rabb Lecture Hall in the Central Library. Call 536-5400 x295.

FRIDAY

3 Get cultured! The Cultural Survival winter bazaar, representing more than 30 indigenous societies, continues today and tomorrow at Memorial Hall, Harvard University, from 10 a.m.-6 p.m. By purchasing arts and crafts from all over the world, you will be helping these communities secure themselves financially and preserve their cultural heritage. Call 621-3818.

SATURDAY

4 Talkin' 'bout my generation — The Who's Tommy arrived in Boston Wednesday, and if you haven't had the chance to see it, well, that's what weekends are for. Considered by many to be the first rock musical on Broadway, the show — with an original score by Pete Townshend — will be here until Dec. 26 at the Colonial Theatre, 106 Boylston St. Call 931-2787 for tickets.

SUNDAY

5 Who needs snow? Dashing through the streets of Boston today is the First Annual Sleigh Bell Parade. The event features floats, bands and Santa Claus. The parade begins at noon by the Hynes Convention Center, travels down Boylston Street onto Charles Street and up Beacon to the State House, lasting approximately two hours. Call 439-7700.

MONDAY

6 If you're feeling adventurous, go to the MIT Premiere Orchestra Concert to see the-first-ever performances of works by students and lecturers. Included are An Autumn Flowering by award-winning composer David Lefkowitz. Admission is $1 at the door. Call Alan Pierson, 731-0201, for information.

TUESDAY

7 How sweet it is! Belgian-chocolatier Alexis Biolley will demonstrate and explain (in English) how chocolate is made, and (yum!) entice you with his original creations at the French Library tonight at 6:15. An appropriate dessert wine will be served. Admission is $15, and non-refundable-advance reservations are required. Call 266-4351 to indulge yourself.

SECRET STORY: Lydia Ooghe in a scene from The Secret Garden, playing at the Colonial Theatre through Nov. 28.

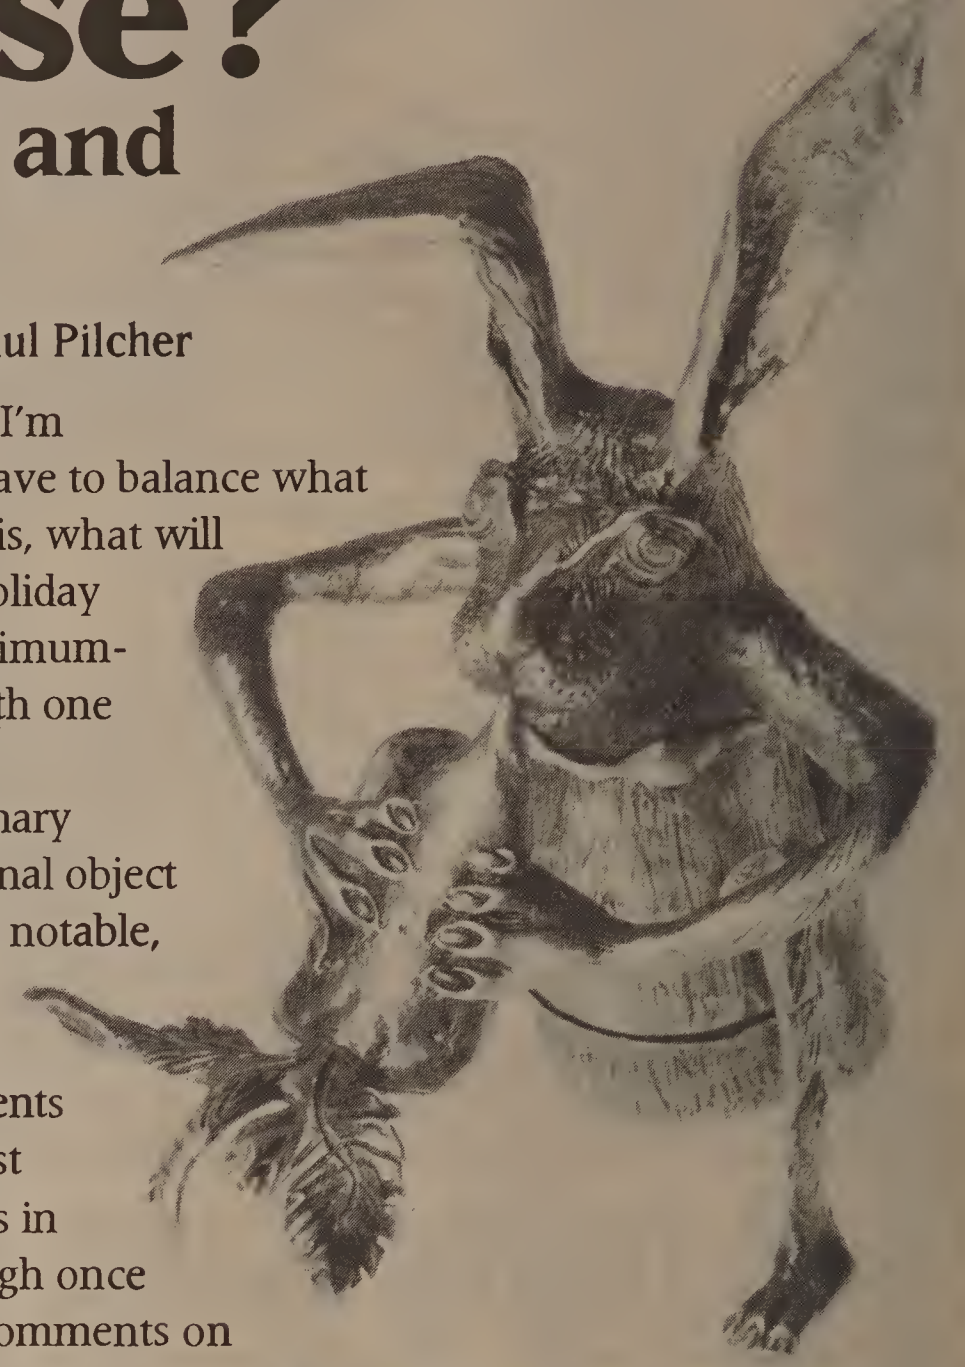
What makes presents desirable above all is an extra dimension that often eludes the best works of art — the fun quotient.

Present Tense?

Gifts Yule Love to Shop for and They'll Love to Get



By Jennifer Kornreich

I've always been one to take things a little too seriously, but I'm convinced that gift-giving is nothing less than an art. You have to balance what your beneficiaries need with what they really want — that is, what will make them happy enough to look forward to next year's holiday season. Just because your best friend could really use a maximum-support brassiere doesn't mean you should actually present her with one on Christmas.

Ever since World War II, critics have futilely argued over the primary definition of art: Is it an aesthetic exercise in pure form; a functional object operating in the real world's realm; or anything the masses deem notable, resulting in what some snobs called "kitsch?"

Well, gifts can be evaluated in much the same way. Some are beautiful, some are useful, some are goofy. But what makes presents desirable above all is an extra dimension that often eludes the best works of art — the fun quotient. The ultimate test of your success in gift-giving is the tendency of your friends and family to smile/laugh once the wrapping paper is ripped to shreds. (You have failed if their comments on the lovely packaging exceeds their forced "Oh… thank you. I can use this, really.") What follows is a gift guide that will leave the recipients of your bounty swooning with gratitude for your imaginative generosity.

LUCKY RABBIT: A carrot-chomping pewter bunny that is actually a box, with just enough space to hold prized, smaller-scaled valuables, makes a wacky-wabbit of a present.

SHINY AND NEW: Lighten up with the Dolphin-Woogie, a lamp whose screen flashes colorful, aquatic images.

Stuff to Please Your Eyeballs

Good Lord, is there anything worse than those cheesy plastic figurines that look like they're straight out of the pages of some TV Guide special-advertising section? Don't exasperate your loved ones with Hummel look-alikes. If you're going to give things that have no other purpose than to clutter up the home and look pretty, we'd like to suggest some infinitely hipper ways to go the chotchke route. One of your best bets is to stop by AmeriGoods (164 Newbury St., 859-9535); just about everything in the store is fascinating. Got a pal who slinks into Lycra every morning for step class? Pick up one of the witty aerobic animals made by World Art in Florida. Made of hand-painted wood, these giraffes, leopards and zebras pose gymnastically in their leotards and leg warmers ($19.95 each).

For a steeper price (but, come on, it's for your big sister, who saved your sorry butt when you'd otherwise have been beaten up in the schoolyard) you can purchase one of the store's fanciful pewter "boxes" made by artist Don Drumm. Each of the madcap creations — the Trojan horse, the carrot-chomping mad rabbit, the dragon, the gasping bass, the howling crazy dog — is more than an eye-catching statuette. The camouflaged, tiny space within is the perfect size for holding a couple of keys or a few coins. Price ranges from $42-$62.

Another sure bet for collectibles is any of the treasures found at the Charles Street Woodhouse (102 Charles St., 523-0797). For the kids, there's Noah's Ark ($38.50), made of Maine pine, the toy has a ramp that opens to reveal the eight pairs of animals inside. For the grown-ups, the shop's Heritage toys are among the most charming woodenware. These foot-high, hand-carved sculptures have the look and feel of antique Americana. Set on wheeled platforms, the 3-D storybook cutouts include a hen with her newly laid egg, the infamous cow jumping over the moon, and a musical wind-up Noah's Ark. $45-$88. In the same vein are the half-fish bookends found across the street at Elements (103A Charles St., 227-3029). The head and tail flank opposite sides of your bookshelf ($40).

More things of beauty abound at Hooloomooloo (222 Newbury St., 247-2333). The entire store is irresistible. Luckily for those of you who can't make decisions, only some stuff is affordable. Among the best sellers, and justifiably so, are the handmade brass bookmarks inspired by Egyptian art ($15 each). These anthropomorphic beasts, lovers entwined Klimt-style, mothers nursing their babies are almost too gorgeous to stick between the pages of a dog-eared paperback. Hooloomooloo also features funky, lightweight pins ($24 each) in the shapes of fish, penguins and pig heads, all — believe it or not — in good taste.

If you can't shell out cash for exorbitant gems, but you know someone who likes to wear unusual jewelry, she'll love a class at Beadworks (23 Church St., Cambridge, 868-9777; 349 Newbury St., 247-7227). A $30 gift certificate for Basic Technique class provides the bearer with the materials and the methods to create earrings and necklaces with beads imported from around the world.

Kinda Functional Accouterments

Light up someone's life! Selletto (244 Newbury St., 424-0656) exclusively offers two stunning creations by artist Sanji Woogie: lamps that take their visual cue from Japanese origami art and work according to the principles of thermodynamics. The Dolphin-Woogie and Bunny-Woogie ($69.95 each) are merry-go-rounds of light. The heat from the bulb makes the paper-cutout center rotate within the surrounding square lampshade, projecting multicolored images of spinning beasts. These lamps rivet the viewer's attention; they're ideal conversation pieces. Mail orders available. For an entirely opposite look, check out the galvanized lanterns from Urban Outfitters (11 JFK St., Cambridge, 864-0070; 361 Newbury St., 236-0088). The crude make of the lanterns oozes Dickensian charm, particularly apt for the Bostonian winter. The UO people say this was a huge hit last year.

Time is money, right? Well, if you're of the giving-checks-is-crass school of thought (like anyone with a modicum of taste), you'll give them the fourth dimension itself. The quirky wall clocks ($28 each) at Elements (18-20 Union Park St., 451-9990; 103A Charles St., 227-3029) are a wonder. Each circular steel disk, encrusted with such brass oddities as miniature kitchen utensils, nautical symbols, pennies and western motifs, runs on a mere AA battery. The miracles of modern science! For a less-industrial look, consider the old-fashioned, cast-iron sundials ($44-140) at T. Wyatt Ltd. (106 Charles St., 720-2530).

There's nothing wrong with giving home-oriented stuff, as long as it's vibrant and way cool, as well as useful. For $25, you can purchase a miniature water dispenser from the Can You Imagine? Corp. at DAPY (Prudential Center, 800 Boylston St., 236-0482; Burlington Mall). The device holds eight glasses' worth of just about any liquid your heart desires. Wooden napkin rings designed to look like shrimp, antennae and all, are available for only $3.75 apiece at the Charles St. Woodhouse, and for $18.95, you can buy painted pewter winecorks at AmeriGoods shaped like jalapeño peppers, cacti, grapes and a million other random things.

Trays of painted ceramicware and glazed terra cotta are extremely popular this year. We found the best, by local artists Jennifer Coles and Steven Yaffe, at Elements. Their Matisse-inspired, cartoonlike designs sell for $35-$80, and are sure to electrify any coffee table. Similar platters, by other artists, are available at Hooloomooloo. Not for the puritanical or staid-at-heart!

The Year of the Gag Gift

1993 might as well be The Year of the Gag Gift. Kitsch has come a long way! Like everything else, it's evolved into an acceptable venture. But that's not necessarily a bad thing. I've found quite a few playthings to covet (pure fluff, sure, but their non-utilitarian whimsy only increases their appeal to the hedonist in me).

GIFT OF TIME: A clock is always a timely gift: T. Wyatt's cast-iron sundials, $44-140.

Someone at your place of work needs one of a pair of voice-activated toys, the Whipping Boy or the Yes Man ($25 each). The Whipping Boy takes the blame for everything his owner does, ruefully screeching things such as, "It was all my fault!," "How could I have been so stupid?," and my personal favorite, "I'm a disease — I make myself sick!" The Yes Man is more straightforwardly obsequious: "I couldn't agree with you more!" and "I wish I'd thought of that!" Available at area stores, including DAPY and Hip 2B Square (224 Newbury St., 424-0190).

Cartoon figures are always sure-fire ways to target the kid in every adult. Filene's (Downtown Crossing; 357-2100) features a series of Peanuts silk ties at $30 each. The funniest prints are those of Snoopy as Joe Cool, playing football, and as a gift-bearing Santa. The new Warner Bros. Studio Stores (Prudential Center, 800 Boylston St., 859-3770) also specialize in cartoon memorabilia. For $24, you can pick up one of the mechanical music boxes, commemorating a famous scene from a cartoon. Open the drawer at the bottom, and the tableaux come to life. There's the singing-and-

St. Nick's Music Picks

By M.T. Anderson

Quivering, embattled, in the midst of a mall at Christmastime, swamped with jolly, shrieking children while "I'll Be Home for Christmas" wails over the loudspeakers, one longs for a simpler time. One longs for a simpler time, and a bludgeon. The great charm of classical-Christmas music is that it helps one forget Christmas. One settles back at home with convivial trumpets burbling in unseen choirs, and the squalor of the modern mall is replaced by a seemingly simpler age when clean snow fell, and men wore silk frock coats and argued about the wingspan of cherubim.

Christmas music, in the form of recordings or concert tickets, makes the perfect gift for those eager for an evening's escape. Boson's music scene offers any number of spectacular events and recordings at this time of year.

At Symphony Hall, the Boston Pops dominate with a series of Christmas concerts so jolly you'll have to anaesthetize your loved ones. These concerts, always favorites in the Boston area, run from the 16th of December on, and hardly need any introduction. They're packed with carols and jazzy orchestrations.

For those poking around Symphony Hall in hopes of a more contemplative Christmas program, there's Roger Norrington's Dec. 10 performance of Berlioz's L'Enfance du Christ, an intimate oratorio that sketches in muted shades the Holy Family's flight into Egypt. The number of the Symphony Hall box office is (617) 266-1492.

Handel's Messiah has long been a tradition in Boston. In the last decade or so, Boston Baroque has staked a powerful claim to best-annual performance of Handel's masterwork. Performances this year will be at Jordan Hall on Dec.16 and 18; book your tickets soon, as, in this case, the return of the Messiah doesn't necessarily mean that the last shall be first. Tickets and information: (617) 641-1310. Needless to say, Boston Baroque's Grammy-nominated recording of The Messiah (Telarc 80322) is a highly recommended gift idea. An early-instrument performance, it ranks alongside Christopher Hogwood's lucid-and-elegant account (L'Oiseau-Lyre 430 488-2) and Trevor Pinnock's lean-and-hungry version (Archiv 423 630-2).

The Boston Camerata, another ground-breaking local early-music group, offers a wonderful range of

Some 1,200 of Boston's biggest and brightest attended last week's 12th-annual American Ireland Fund New England Dinner Dance at the Boston Marriott Copley Place. The Dinner is one of the city's most successful benefits (raising more than $1 million annually for peace, culture and charity programs in Ireland).

DANCING LASS: Deirdre O'Brien, daughter of AIF Dinner-underwriter Paul C. O'Brien of New England Telephone, dances with Holy Cross student Ed Soltesz.

FROM IRELAND, WITH LOVE: The Irish Consul General Conor O'Riordan and his wife Trisha take in their first AIF Dinner.

Gifts Yule Love

There's the singing-and-dancing frog who drives the hobo crazy in 1956's One Froggy Evening; Sylvester caught in the act of grabbing Tweety out of his cage in 1957's Birds Anonymous, and Bugs and Daffy dancing to the "Loony Tunes" theme in tails and top hats.

But why not go for even more outrageous examples of novelty gifts? Again, at Elements, you can choose from an assortment of all-cotton throw pillows sporting wacky prints ($28-36 each). There's the Warhollike multiple montage of Elvis; a blue-and-gold sun-moon-stars theme; and a farm scene, complete with barn, farmer and animals. At Hip 2B Square, $24.99 will buy you a decidedly ungeeky calculator, adorned with a replica of a pool table, solid-and-striped balls to boot. And perhaps the funniest example of tackiness comes from Filene's because it appears so unintentional, so earnest in its proposed purpose. Yes, my Inadvertently Gauche Award goes to the microwave-heated seat cushion, manufactured by Dearfoams ($30). Just nuke the two-person apparatus for six minutes, and you're guaranteed a few hours of warm gluteus muscles. And, hey, it's water/stain-resistant, and it comes with its own totebag, too! Ludicrous and embarrassing, but ideal for friends who'll be attending freezing football games through January.

GAGGLE OF GIFTS: The battery-operated Whipping Boy, candy magnets, and a "Loony Tunes" mechanical music box indulge kitschy and whimsical desires.

Of course, instead of actually giving a prime specimen of kitsch, you can present your more high-minded friends with a tome that chronicles its role in the descent of popular culture. Urban Outfitters and area bookstores carry HarperPerennial's *Encyclopedia of Bad Taste by Jane and Michael Stern ($16). The book is not only hilarious — paying tribute to such horrifyingly seductive phenomena as feminine-hygiene spray, Muzak, wax museums, Lawrence Welk, pro wrestling, ant farms, lawn ornaments, maraschino cherries and the Gabors — but it's honest-to-God educational, as well, replete with accurate historical and statistical information. A definitive volume on media-saturated anomalies.

EDIBLE INCREDIBLES

I must stray from my gifts-as-art discourse to touch briefly upon the edible-present category. Don't bother to give food, unless you genuinely want to make your loved ones fatter. For calories that really count, I have just one suggestion: Truffles (Prudential Center, 800 Boylston, 536-2663). Aside from its signature handmade truffles (beautiful, egg-shaped chocolates filled with champagne, Grand Marnier and hazelnut) the store showcases more unusual confections. Truffles' fudge flavors include penuchi nut, apple-cinnamon, and mudslide; its jumbo coconut clusters and peanut-butter cups are the size of a child's hand! This penultimate candy shop assembles gift baskets of hand-painted Limoge boxes, chocolates, non-chocolate candy and magnets that replicate scoops of gum balls and famous candy bars (prices vary; $3.50 per magnet). ❑ ancient Christmas music this year. Its Christmas concerts Dec. 18-19 will feature carols and dances from France (for information: (617) 262-2092). Boston Camerata's programs are always entertaining and skillfully arranged.

PILLOW TALK: Take a walk on the other side of gift-giving at Elements on Charles Street: oversized Elvis pillows; painted-ceramic bowls by local artists Steven Yaffe and Jennifer Coles, a clock with cutlery-pieces marking time, and half-fish bookends.

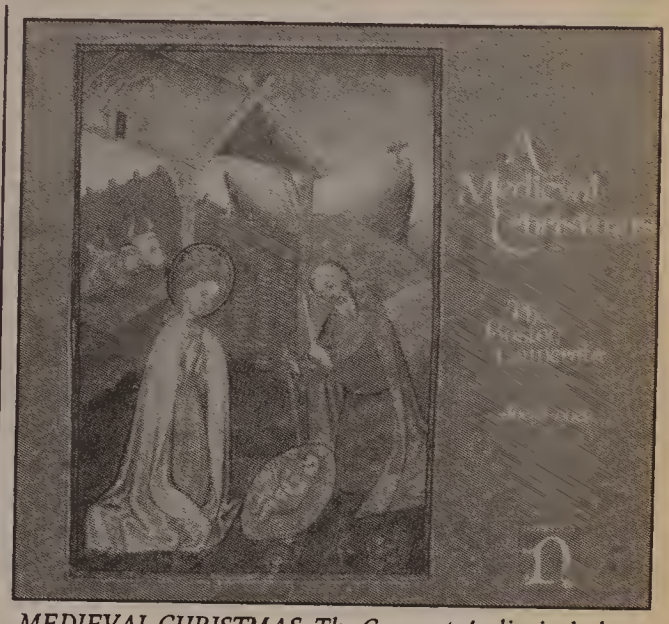
The Boston Camerata has also been busy in the studio. Beyond its lively new recording of traditional American Christmas music — not so much Ives as Currier and Ives (see "Classical Music" column in this issue, p. 30, for a review) — Nonesuch records has just released a handsome set of three for its earlier Christmas discs: A Medieval Christmas (Nonesuch 71315-2), A Renaissance Christmas (Nonesuch 79134-2), and A Baroque Christmas (Nonesuch 79265-2). These discs are cheap and make good-and-unusual gifts, either alone or in the new boxed set (With Joyful Voice, Nonesuch 79303-2). The medieval disc, in particular, is striking, presenting examples of almost every major medieval musical genre — from organum, in which a single voice floats freely over potent open chords, radiant as a frigid sunrise, to jangling carols sung as donkeys are led, dressed as bishops, into a decked-out cathedral. The baroque disc offers as its main selection Charpentier's delicate "Midnight Mass," based on French carols, performed here with some pretty-scrumptious ornamentation. At mid-price, all are an exquisite gift recommendation.



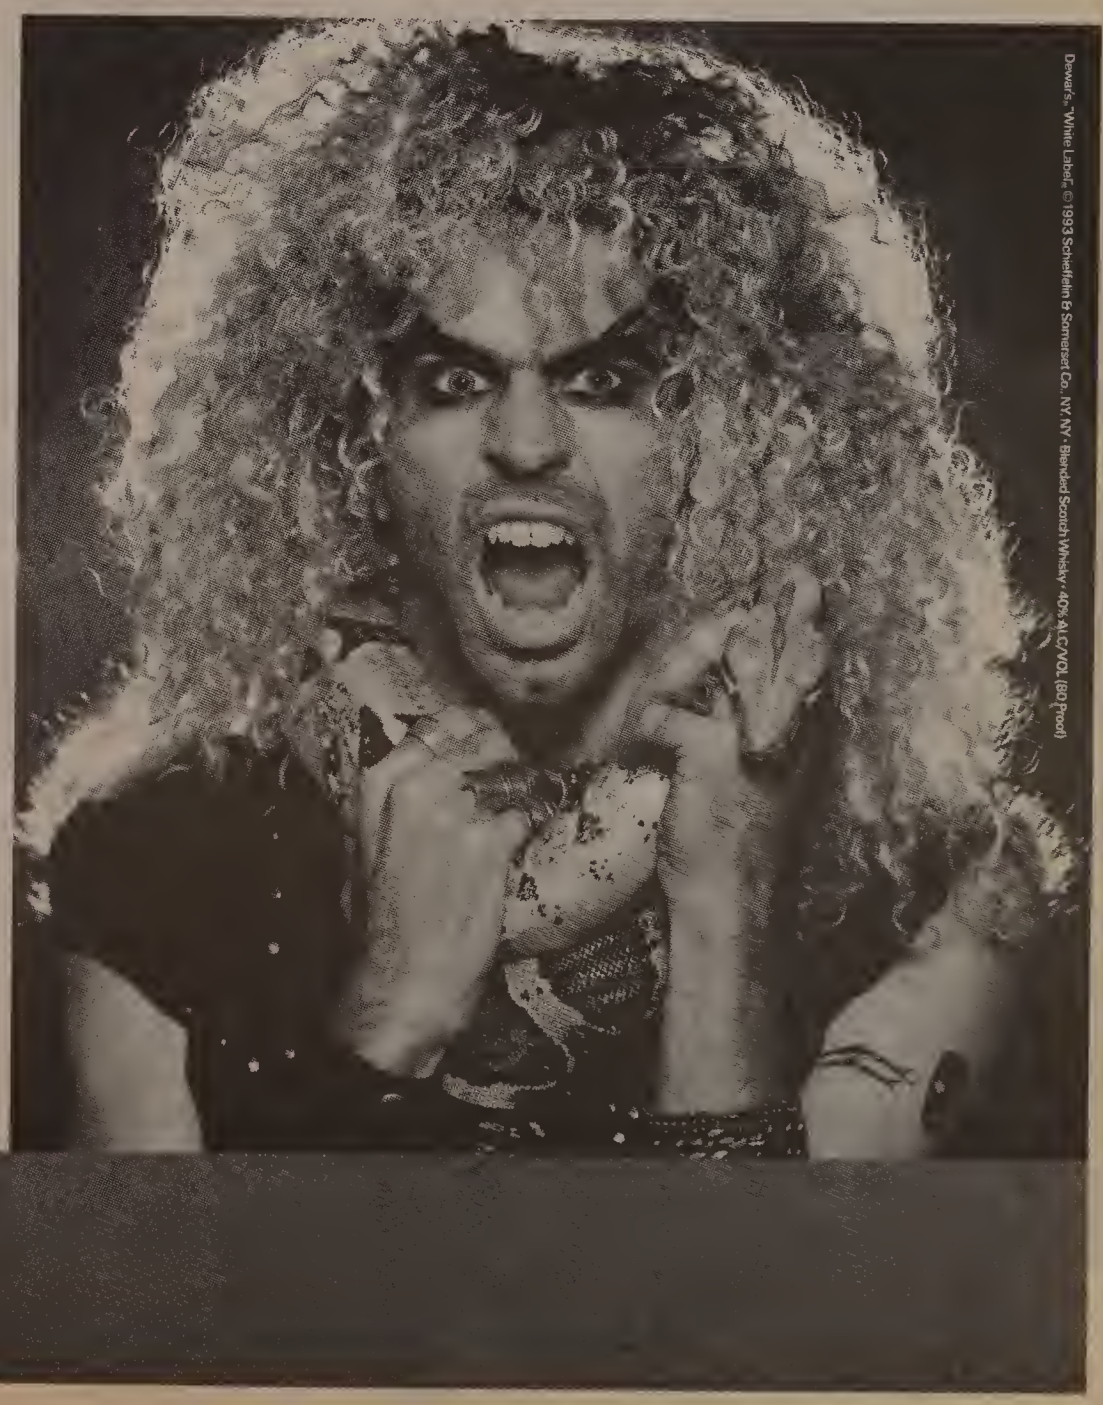
If you want to hear Charpentier's "Midnight Mass" live, it will also be performed by the Spectrum Singers at First Church Congregational in Cambridge on Dec. 5, along with Poulenc's little set of fauvist motets on the Nativity. For information, call 469-3723.

The Boston Classical Orchestra, which performs at historic Faneuil Hall, is offering a Christmas selection ranging from excerpts from Handel's Messiah to Christmas symphonies by Haydn and local composer Daniel Pinkham, who has recently had a disc of his highly accessible Christmas and Advent cantatas released (Koch 3-7180-2). The performances are on Dec. 1, 3 and 5; for information, call (617) 426-2387.

The Boston Cecilia, which recorded Pinkham's "Christmas Cantata," will be giving a performance of this and Britten's "Ceremony of Carols" at All Saints Church in Brookline on Dec. 18 (for information, call (617) 232-4540). These are very approachable, modern works, modern, yet touched with inflections of past rites.

Most local churches will be holding Advent processions of lessons and carols, a fine old form that never fails to enchant, unless you stand next to someone tone deaf. The Episcopal Cathedral of St. Paul is holding its Advent service on Dec. 5 at 6 p.m. Also worth checking out are churches such as Trinity, the Advent and Emmanuel, which offer choral singing without parallel. Emmanuel's choir released a disc featuring some of Heinrich Schütz's unaccompanied Advent and Christmas motets earlier this year (Koch 3-7174-2). These are luminous performances, already receiving international acclaim.

Finally, for those getting tired of all this hymning and hooting, Tchaikovsky's ballet The Nutcracker is performed Nov. 26 through Jan. 2 at the Wang Center. This is another local tradition: If you grew up near Boston, chances are you spent at least one night of your childhood gāsping gape-mouthed at the delightful spectacle of the ballet's magical, growing fir tree and wondering why all those funny little people were hopping around it. The spectacle still glitters, and the music still enchants. Call (617) 931-2787 for information.



MEDIEVAL CHRISTMAS: The Camerata's disc includes a striking example of every medieval genre.

Classical Christmas music offers a welcome alternative to department-store cheer, and it would be a blah Christmas without it. At any rate, this should suggest ideas for special-and-unusual gifts for those who want to give something out of the ordinary and take a break from rockin' around the Christmas tree. ❑

Your taste in music isn't the only thing changing.

Jane Langton
Divinely Inspired

By Nicole L. Mills

"Div Insp" is the label on a stop knob of the great pipe organ in the Church of the Commonwealth, which is, in a way, the main character of Jane Langton's latest mystery novel Divine Inspiration. The name, she explains, comes not from any religious enlightenment she might have received, but from an afternoon in which she and her son were trying to figure out how to use the remote control for their TV and VCR. After some frustration, she recalls, smiling, her son suggested that remote boxes should come equipped with a button marked "Div Insp" for those times when mechanical know-how fails. The Div Insp button on the Church of the Commonwealth's pipe organ has a similar function: whenever the organist "loses touch with whatever the hell's going on in the service."

Whether divinely inspired or not, Langton's new novel, set familiarly in the Back Bay, is a cleverly woven detective story incorporating such varied elements as mechanical pipe organs, the sewer system running under the Back Bay's landfilled acres, and the art of starting fires. "The underpinnings of things in mystery stories are very important," she says.

In Divine Inspiration, Langton's professorial detective, Homer Kelly, neatly connects all of these pieces. To understand exactly how all these underpinnings work, Langton spent about two years writing and researching her book. She admits to "always finding, with each chapter, that I had to run out and look up something else."

Langton, who lives in a 200-year-old farmhouse in Lincoln, not half-a-mile away from Walden Pond, has set nine of her 10 novels, including Emily Dickinson Is Dead and God in Concord, in Massachusetts. To be inspired, she reports she has to "wait until something hits me; it has to be an interesting place and have some connection to something literary or musical."

For Bostonians, a great part of the charm of Divine Inspiration is the I've-been-there response that readers will have as characters traipse through Trinity Church, run over Beacon Hill and stroll down Comm. Ave.

Langton's next novel will be set in Cambridge and promises to contain the interweaving musical, mystical and whimsical threads that characterize her work.

MYSTERY WRITER: Jane Langton's latest novel will strike familiar chords with Bostonians.

ZOO KEEPER: Sanders Lewallen plans to overhaul Boston's zoos, as he did Atlanta's.

Sanders Lewallen
Animal Instinct

By Johanna Roveto

With quiet confidence, Sanders Lewallen announces that Boston's zoos will be the next great American zoos. Waving his arm past the Franklin Park Zoo's rain forest and aviaries, he points to a hillside that will house lions and zebras and to campsites used by scouts from across Eastern Massachusetts. He shows off the lawn between the two Franklin Park entrances, part of the Emerald Necklace, already hosting concerts that are among new programs drawing the community to the zoos.

"Ten years ago or so, Parade magazine surveyed the best and worst zoos in America. The worst list included alligator farms, the zoo in Atlanta, and Boston," he remembers, smiling. Atlanta is no longer even considered for such a list, thanks to Lewallen, who led the turnaround of ZooAtlanta. He is now president of the Commonwealth Zoological Corp. (CZC), formed in July 1992 to privatize the zoos and make Franklin Park Zoo and the Stone Zoo destinations once again for both residents and tourists.

An architect and designer by training, Lewallen focused on zoos from the start and spent several years with the National Zoo in Washington, D.C. He took on Atlanta, where local naysayers cited inner-city neighborhoods and run-down exhibits as reasons that change would be impossible. Lewallen quietly built community ties and in turn drew the interest of corporations and foundations, eventually proving the naysayers wrong.

"If people want a great zoo, they can have it." Lewallen and his team of 60 at CZC are well into the first of a three-phase program to update the zoos by the year 2000. As in Atlanta, Lewallen has been reaching out to community members from Boston and its suburbs. Membership is increasing, and attendance has more than doubled this year to some 400,000 visitors annually. Lewallen is now reaching out to businesses interested in being a part of certain success.

At the same time, Lewallen is busy educating Bostonians about the rich history of our zoos, pointing out historical landmarks and rare species being studied here. "Sex at the Zoo," a Valentine's Day presentation on animal-mating habits, outlines another aspect of the zoos' work, the procreation of endangered species.

"Years ago, zoos were consumers of the animal world. These days they are contributors, giving back what we have pushed almost to extinction. We need the community to be a part of that. Boston has everything else in terms of culture and education. What was missing, what we are bringing back, are zoos."

FAREWELL MY CONCUBINE

Farewell My Concubine is the title of a Chinese opera and director Chen Kaige's epic film about two Beijing opera stars who endure brutal training as boys in the 1920s and give their last performance in the 1970s. Cheng Dieyi (Leslie Cheung) plays the concubine, on- and off stage. Duan Xiaolou (Zhang Fengyi) is his heterosexual and more-secular friend and lover — and king to Dieyi's concubine. Their struggles with identity, integrity, love and loyalty are compelling, especially as they are brought on by sweeping political tumult. Through repetition of a single passage, the transfixing beauty of the language, the music and the concubine emerges. Also starring Gong Li as the courageous whore whose attemps to lead a quiet life are doomed to failure.

Why is this admirable film ultimately disappointing? The answer may lay in the uneven tone and disjointed story — maintaining a grip on the characters amid the confusion is difficult. Still, the surrealistic horror of the opening images, surveying the aftermath of a terrible plane crash, knocks the wind out of you. The film's mystical approach to the reluctant hero's (Jeff Bridges) new sense of invulnerability and ghostly detachment from his family is a welcome twist on the straight comedy of Hero. A good point for debate is the scene in which Bridges tries to release fellow-survivor Rosie Perez's guilt over her dead baby by smashing his car into a brick wall. Is the scene absurd or is it justified as an oddly rational act that appears completely irrational?

FLESH AND BONE

This moody, somber film stars Dennis Quaid as Arlis, a young Texan haunted by a dark past and a father (James Caan) who raised him to be a partner-in-crime. Now a clean, straight vending-machine supplier, Arlis finds his regular route upset by a sweet-but-abused young woman (Meg Ryan) who joins him for the ride and by his father, who tries to steer him back onto the wrong road. Unfortunately there is more flesh than solid bone here. Still, the plot holds together (the twists work) and the acting is superb.

A HOME OF OUR OWN

Honest, heartfelt and totally boring. Director Tony Bill has avoided drama at all costs to capture the hellish drabness of complete poverty. Kathy Bates plays a tough, unsentimental mother raising six kids on her own, who tries to set down roots in a house in Idaho that is little more than a shack. What passes for conflict is the tension between her and her eldest son (Edward Furlong), who resents her relentless optimism. Bates seems uncomfortable mouthing the penny slogans that her character is continually pronouncing as she marshals her kids about. Even the narrator — the grown son looking back — sounds bored by it all. For a vastly superior, less-sentimental coming-of-age portrait, set against the hardships of poverty and flawed parents, see This Boy's Life.

As if enough hasn't been said already, TriStar unleashes the latest adventures of the ne'er-do-well Ubriacco family. This time they reluctantly adopt two dogs, a mutt (voice of Danny DeVito) and a pedigree poodle (voice of Diane Keaton). As they adjust to apartment life, the dogs make the family's already-complicated life almost unbearable. The dogs have problems of their own, and only we know why they chew shoes and "make" on the rug. These dogs scratch and claw their ways into our hearts with their canine intellect and endearing expressions. Their personalities are at least as interesting and well-defined as the human characters. Only Kirstie Alley whines better than they do.

Good campy fun, although it's apparently meant to be a serious thriller. Taken at face value, the film is utterly ridiculous in all dimensions: plot, direction, acting, and most of all, writing. A Yuppie college-town couple, played by Bill Pullman and Nicole Kidman, find their marriage becoming strained after the new hot-shot doctor in town (Alec Baldwin) rents out a room in their house. When Baldwin botches an operation on Kidman, she takes the huge settlement and leaves her dazed husband, who decides to track her down and discovers things aren't quite what they seem. Adding to the mess is a tossed-off subplot of a serial killer on campus. Best line belongs to the ultra-confident Baldwin: "I am God." Lots of shots of Smith College and Boston.

J.W. Hall

MY LIFE

If you blubbered through Ghost, Bruce Joel Rubin's previous film, his latest film about death should get to you again. Michael Keaton has cancer (symptomatic of repressed anger, it's suggested) and fears dying before his wife, Nicole Kidman (who's really preggers), gives birth. For the child, Keaton starts videotaping his guarded life, forcing him to reconnect with his blue-collar family, of which he's always been ashamed. There's also the requisite mystical stuff as Keaton reluctantly turns to a faith healer (Haing Ngor). Those who disliked Ghost may feel a similar retreat from tougher moments, as the journey to death becomes a fantasy release of anger and fear and a parade of cute moments to make us feel better. Well made, but there isn't a surprising moment in it.

THE NIGHTMARE BEFORE CHRISTMAS

Tim Burton's macabre stop-motion animation musical is a welcome antidote to Christmas-sugar shock brought on by too many sugar plums, cuddly toys and ho-ho-hos. Jack Skellington, King of Halloweentown, falls down a rabbit hole into Christmastown and becomes so enamored of this frosty, merry and bright world that he kidnaps Santa Claus and takes over. The problem is that Halloweentown, a black-white-and-gray place where Doctors Seuss and Caligari would feel right at home, is the only world he and his helpers know, and they can't help but put a Halloween spin on Christmas. Presents are bloody with sharp teeth, and Santa's sleigh is a coffin pulled by reindeer skeletons and Zero, the red-nosed ghost dog. The story is actually rather sweet and the forces of good prevail thanks to feisty-rag-doll Sally.

K.Wilson

Arguably the best film of the '90s, so good that it even survives an inadequate, less-than-earthshaking ending. The Robert Altman of Nashville still lives, thank god, re-energized by the collapsed moral center of middle-class Los Angeles. Altman weaves together several Raymond Carver short stories about couples fighting, falling apart and screwing around. A film that takes chances and asks hard questions about what it means to be human, it's a scathing, pornographic tragicomedy on the level of Last Tango in Paris. Breathtaking acting from Tim Robbins, Jennifer Jason Leigh, Jack Lemmon and Chris Penn among a huge, great cast. Discussion groups ought to be mandatory afterward; so many emotions are stirred up that a release is needed.

PIANO FORTE

"...In The Piano, director Jane Campion continues her exploration of female sexuality. But the film is a significant departure from her earlier work..."

PIANO DUET: Co-stars Holly Hunter and Harvey Keitel

Movies dish up lots of sex but mostly they shy away from exploring sexuality, especially female sexuality. Women peel off their clothes, pant, moan and climax, all in less than the time it takes to soft-boil an egg. The films of New Zealand-director Jane Campion are notable exceptions.

In A Girl's Own Story (1983), her wonderfully disturbing-and-funny short film about adolescent-female sexuality, a girl dons a mask of Beatle Paul and practices making out with her girlfriend. A daddy's-girl wannabe tries to compete with a mistress and wife — her mother — for Daddy's lust.

Campion's brilliant Sweetie (1989) is a tale of two sisters: Kay, a pinched, sexually paralyzed young woman, and Sweetie, a punked-out, medicated nightmare. Sweetie turns out to be the family garbage can, the repository for family members' individual-and-collective craziness, including their sexual urges and fears.

The heroine of An Angel at My Table (1990), based on the autobiography of New Zealand-writer Janet Frame, is so painfully shy that her sexuality is a source of shame and torment until she moves to Europe and has an affair.

In The Piano Campion continues her exploration of female sexuality. But the film is a significant departure from her earlier work: it has more of a plot, it's set in another century — in the 1850s — and it's very romantic. Campion cites Emily Brontë's Wuthering Heights as an influence, and Ada, the film's plain, serious and passionate heroine (exquisitely played by Holly Hunter), is a cousin of Charlotte Brontë's Jane Eyre and Lucy Snow (from Villette).

Ada consciously stopped speaking at the age of 6. She communicates through her daughter Flora (Anna Paquin), with whom she's extremely close, and through her passionate-and-insistent piano-playing. Ada journeys to New Zealand to meet and marry Stewart (Sam Neill). When her piano is stranded on the beach, she makes a deal with Baines (Harvey Keitel), an illiterate, tattooed settler gone "native," to acquire it back key by key. Thus the stage is set for Ada, Baines and Stewart to play out a complicated, sometimes-humorous and savage sexual triangle.

The New Zealand landscape is also a major player in the drama. It's breathtaking, elemental. The ocean, the mountains, the vegetation, the rain and the mud: each has a life force and will of its own. It's a wild, watery world ("bottom of the fish tank" is the look and feel Campion wanted), an unconscious, non-rational, non-linear world in which truth and meaning exist below and beyond the level of human speech.

The line between the civilized and the savage, the life-sustaining and the murderous, the conscious and the unconscious constantly shifts and blurs. The piano is equal parts life preserver and "coffin." Stewart has an appealing sweetness but is capable of shocking savagery. Baines looks dangerous but can be gentle and sensitive; Ada's silence and music speak to him. Their passion is wild but is played out within the boundaries of 19th-century romanticism, except when it takes a modern twist and turns. Ada, who lives by her own rules, enjoys the power she has over the two men and subtly plays one against the other.

Campion knows that sexuality doesn't just happen; it develops in a historical, social and psychological context. And it's a family affair. After glimpsing one of her mother's "piano lessons" with Baines, Flora and her friends wander around the forest, rubbing their bodies against trees. Stewart tells Flora she is shaming the trees and makes her wash them down as punishment. Eventually, Flora allies herself with Stewart — no doubt out of anger and jealousy directed at her mother.

The Piano is about a sexual triangle, if you count only the adults. ❑

La Mort de Chabrol

"...Chabrol's blasé attitude caught up with him. The once-great filmmaker has dried up..."

Claude Chabrol started off brilliantly in the mid-1950s, as young, genius film critic for France's influential magazine Cahiers du Cinema. In 1957, he co-authored the first book about Alfred Hitchcock. As filmmaker, Chabrol began the French New Wave with his dazzlingly precocious features, Le Beau Serge (1958) and Les Cousins (1968).

In the 1960s, Chabrol became, simply, one of the world's great filmmakers, combining Hitchcockian suspense with perverse Buñuelian wit for his own inimitable filmic purposes. In Chabrol's circumscribed bourgeois world, stifling, perfectly polite French suburbia — beautiful wines, elegant dinners, classical music — unraveled into adultery and murder. Raw sex spilled over, and red blood splattered.

With seeming ease, Chabrol produced masterpieces: Les Bonnes Femmes (1960), La Femme Infidele (1968), Le Boucher (1969), This Man Must Die (1970). But in the 1960s and 1970s, the extremely prolific director also made a bunch of so-so movies — lightweight, commercial, ill-conceived co-productions — that he didn't seem to really care about. Some of his choices were just plain inexplicable.

"Chabrol has more formal talent than any of the French New Wave directors, including Godard and Truffaut," director Bertrand Tavernier (Round Midnight) opined over a breakfast with me at September's Montreal World Film Festival. "But he can be very lazy."

Tavernier, who worked for him as a publicist in the late 1960s, said that Chabrol always balked at doing location scouting. Cynically, Chabrol sometimes cast questionable actors and agreed to do stupid movies, just for the hell of it.

"I remember Chabrol taking me aside on the set and whispering about his actors, `Look how bad they are!,' and enjoying that," Tavernier recalled.

Bad actors, bad movies. So what? As long as there are good movies, too.

Not too surprisingly, Chabrol's blasé attitude caught up with him. Since the fascinating Violette in 1978, the once-great filmmaker has dried up; his once-enormous talent has shriveled and almost disappeared.

Only once in recent years has Chabrol achieved arthouse success: The Story of Women (1968), a detached-and-phony feminist look at a woman abortionist operating in Vichy, France. Chabrol came back with the amazingly moribund Madame Bovary (1991), so lacking in passion and imagination that dullard Charles Bovary could have directed it.

Which brings us at last to an utterly depressing new Chabrol film called Betty. For a dreary night at the cinema, watch Chabrol's alcoholic-nymphomaniac femme-fatale protagonist (Marie Trintignant) connive her way though her sorrowful life. Chabrol alternates between mawkish confessionals by Betty and tiresome flashbacks. Some of the story takes place at a hellish bar-restaurant called the Hole, an appropriate setting for the dance-of-the-dead descent of Claude Chabrol's filmmaking.

Chabrol's wonderful actress wife, Stephane Audrane, who stars in his classics, is wasted as Betty's confidante.

The War Room

We're back on the Clinton-campaign trail, the New Hampshire primary and beyond, for this wry, vastly entertaining documentary about what happened behind the scenes of the 1992 presidential election. Bill and Hillary are seen in only peeks and glimpses: a likable junior-high gym coach with a pretty, blonde wife and a goofy-looking daughter. All attention is on the planners and plotters: stud George Stephanopoulus and, more often, James Carville, the merry machiavel who runs away with the movie because of his charisma and off-the-cuff acerbic wit: "[George Bush] reeks of old. When I see an old calendar, I think of Bush's face." Ross Perot's 60-million-dollar presidential campaign? "The most-expensive single act of masturbation in history." ❑

Flower Power

"...The flower paintings are seductively beautiful and Gillespie's portraits reveal deep interpretations of character and personality..."

One of the most important art events of the year is a rare retrospective, "Frances Cohen Gillespie Paintings," of 17 portraits and floral still lifes at the Mary Ingraham Bunting Institute of Radcliffe College. Those suffering the seasonal blahs will welcome this feast of rich color and warm light, which will be on view in Cambridge through Dec. 17. These highly realistic, detailed paintings, from the 1960s through the present, often require several years to complete.

"Fran Gillespie is in it for the long haul," Theodore E. Stebbins Jr., the John Moors Cabot curator of American Art at the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, writes in the exhibition catalogue. "She lives in order to paint and paints in the same way that she lives: nervously, obsessively, beautifully. She might have become a victim: instead she has drawn on huge reserves of courage and on her own special vision to become one of the best painters anywhere."

The artist was, for many years (until a move to rural New York), a part of the Northampton Realists: Gregory Gillespie, her former husband; Randall Diehl, Scott Prior and Jane Lund. These artists paint directly from nature, in the tradition and techniques of the Old Masters. Several also pursue forms of surrealism and fantasy illustration. While these artists are highly respected by some important curators, critics and collectors, their work has been ignored and even ridiculed by the multicultural, politically correct, cutting-edge art world. So much for fashion and taste.

The paintings in the Bunting show ask the basic question: How can you work with the techniques and the vision of the past and still be a part of contemporary art? This does not refer to the cloying-and-populist sentimentality of Andrew Wyeth and Norman Rockwell nor to "TV Realism," where we "take our magic brush and then, so easily, bing-bang-boom, we have a little tree."

Gillespie's images are the result of intense concentration, brutal self-criticism and a relentless search for what the 19th-century British-critic John Ruskin described as "truth to nature."

Particularly in her paintings from the 1970s, the surfaces were repainted so many times that the endless layers of paint form a surface like shallow relief sculpture. With compulsive obsession, Gillespie was "just trying to get it to look right." She has never been an intuitive painter with facile brushstrokes, but her paintings have improved and intensified over the years due to her fundamentalist work ethic. She claims that she is getting faster; recent pictures reveal that her surfaces and command of detail are crisper, ever-more masterful and confident.

While the flower paintings are seductively beautiful, the portraits reveal deep interpretations of character and personality. An early work, Adolescent Nude (1976), depicts her pubescent daughter lying nude on a Victorian couch with a floral-patterned wallpaper. The unclassical detail of plain-white underpants was added, at the insistence of the model, after the painting was finished. A double portrait with her former husband was cut into separate portraits (both in this show) and reworked after they were divorced. Her side (with an uncanny resemblance to the Mexican artist Frida Kahlo) reveals his "amputated" arm. The exhibition also contains her masterpiece of portraiture, Leah a Roma, 1985-88. Here, a seated adolescent girl wears a silk robe before a window with a Greek pot on the sill and a view of Rome beyond.

Gillespie was a Bunting fellow from 1981-1982. The Bunting Institute, founded in 1961, offers distinguished women access to the research facilities of Harvard University but is funded and administrated by Radcliffe College. Each year the institute offers fellowships to 40 women in many academic fields, four of which are in the visual arts. The program is the most extensive and prestigious of its kind and has spawned many "mini-Buntings," according to Florence Ladd, the charismatic director of the institute, who describes her job as "nurturing genius." ❑

PORT OF CALL

"...Great vintage port, with its long intriguing history, constitutes one of the few unique-and-enduring masterpieces winedom has evolved..."

Vintage port, with its long, intriguing history, is the classic wine for people who love to talk. By its very nature, it is never something you gulp to "wash down" food, to borrow a distressingly accurate phrase from current usage. Opaque, thick in aroma and flavor complexity, and slow to evolve, port stimulates memory, encourages shared confidences, and allows the poet we may have lurking within to rise to the surface.

This most civilized of wines, however, faces mountainous hurdles before it can grow in general appreciation. First, the near-universal prejudice against sweet wines as somehow beneath scorn reduces dramatically the potential consumer audience. Another sizable group, although it may prize vintage port, is forever seeking ways to reduce its caloric intake and somehow finds sugar in wine easier to skip than in desserts.

IM-PORT-ANT: Peter Cobb, director of Cockburn port, a wine considered to be understated, cool and aristocratic.

Guardians of public decency have long equated alcohol consumption itself with a litany of evils. Even those of us resistant to their propaganda have begun to feel it is more responsible to consume less alcohol. Vintage port hovers around the 20-percent-by-volume mark: strike two!

Furthering the perception that drinking port constitutes conspicuous consumption and is therefore out of phase with the sober-and-moderate '90s, the wine is expensive. Worse, it seems elitist and inaccessible. In addition to the uncomfortable aesthetic-and-health questions port raises, one must follow what appears to be a complicated folklore of vintages and stylized serving rituals. A sizable group must be assembled to consume the bottle at one sitting since mature port is as perishable as old claret.

Finally, if port is a wine one discusses rather than quaffs, how prosperously can it fare in an age when the art of gracious conversation is nearing extinction? Who has time nowadays to sit for hours after dinner swirling, sniffing and reminiscing as the magical liquid in the glass begins gradually to reveal its wonders?

Make no mistake: fathoming what it is that makes this wine so special is an effort well worth expending. Great vintage port constitutes one of the few unique-and-enduring masterpieces winedom has evolved. Recent opportunities to taste five offerings from the storied 1963 vintage, just emerging into drinkability, yielded the following delightful comparisons:

Cockburn. A cool aristocrat, understated and reserved, emblematic of the house-style. One cannot but esteem the breathless aroma of dried flowers and spice. The once-formidable tannins have fallen away, leaving the impression of a satin-textured beauty with tender harmonious fruit and a finish that stretches beyond the horizon.

Fonseca. A humbling wine; complete, exotically rich and fleshy, built on a monumental scale. The luscious fruit tends to the sweet and raisiny, but there is ample backbone to guarantee further glories.

Quinta da Noval. With enveloping aromas of bitter almond, dark chocolate and licorice, this is a marvel of coiled youthful energy. Still sturdy, almost aggressive, there is a concealed charge of explosive fruit in the glass. Tasted at a sumptuous feast prepared for the grand opening of the Swissôtel Boston's Salon Adrienne, the wine seemed tough and charmless at first, but the blue-veined Roquefort accompanying it coaxed the considerable flavors along.

Taylor, Fladgate. Flamboyant in aroma, this bold, strutting peacock shows traces of youthful violet, Oriental spice and cassis. Its expansive brew of moka, berry and walnut flavors balance nicely against the firm acid and smooth tannins. Deep and compact in every sense.

Warre. The sole disappointment, nice cherry perfume, but the fruit is fading and the flavors are a bit weak and medicinal. This was tasted after dinner at a San Francisco restaurant, however, and the suspicion lingers that the bottle had been opened too long. Restaurants should avoid serving mature vintage port by the glass for just this reason. On the other hand, some establishments, such as the Pillar House in Newton, offer a bonanza of older bottles at very reasonable prices (e.g., among the 1963s: Sandeman at $85, Warre at $90 and Noval at $95, each below current retail). ❑

DAVIO'S

202 WASHINGTON ST., BROOKLINE - 738-4810

Iceland is surrounded by endless miles of seething ocean. It is pummeled by Arctic winds and perilous storms. Its latitude and longitude converge in as desolate a place as any on the planet. And while no one can say for certain what could have possessed the Vikings to come to this place we call Iceland over a hundred centuries ago, we do know what they found once they got here.

A valley. A mountain. And a spring surging up from a place deep beneath the surface of the earth. Forcing its way upward, through ice, solidified layers of lava, and rock. Until, finally, it burst through into the sunlight. A water of such improbable purity, there are those among us who, even now, fervently believe that it surely must have sprung up from the very gods themselves.

The Vikings braved 50-foot seas, gale winds and sea monsters to discover our water. Surely you can manage a trip to the corner market.

The same Icelandic spring of life that continues to flow as clean and clear now as it has since the Ice Age. Indeed, from the very beginning of time itself. Thousands upon thousands of miles from anywhere. Untainted. Untouched. Unspoiled by civilization.

We call it Akva. A spring water unlike any other on earth. And if we seem a bit confident in this, rest assured it is not without good reason.

No other spring water, after all, comes from a place so completely and utterly removed from the compromising influences of civilization. To put it mildly, Iceland is as far off the beaten path as any place on earth.

As a result, our Akva spring water is remarkably soft. Clear. Without so much as a trace of sodium or other impurities. We hope you will try Akva.

You will find that it's available now on the shelves of your favorite corner market or delicatessen.

We know the Vikings had an almost insatiable thirst for adventure. Perhaps now we know how they quenched it.

Akva spring water. The pure soul of Iceland.™

Dining Review /R.E. Brunson

Rude Food

"...Dick's is the place: Service with a sneer and food that is fresh, fried and home-style, although a little bland — like Mom's..."

When Dick's Last Resort opened in October, a new (low) level in dining arrived in Boston. On a Friday night, just a week after the opening, we found ourselves waiting in line to enter this culinary twilight zone, along with a crowd of gustatory thrill-seekers who wouldn't have known Biba's from Butthead. We usually give a restaurant a month or two to get its act together before a review, but with Dick's, we decided to hold our nose and dive right in. Besides, the restaurant probably wouldn't get better with age and it certainly couldn't get much worse. In fact, Dick's apologizes in advance.

RESORT CUISINE: Nostalgia for diners who miss the days before beer went lite and cholesterol became a dirty word.

Upon entering, any food-poisoning worries were dispelled by the sign next to the kitchen informing diners that the restaurant was breaking records with six poison-free days. The host herded our party to a long table shared with 11 other diners and insulted us as we sat down. The dining room has all the ambiance of a warehouse. Its walls are covered with neon-beer signs and a collection of pictures that must have been lifted from someone's trash. The highlight of the collection is a portrait of Elvis on a black background (velvet?).

Our waiter arrived, recited the menu and announced that the strip of paper on the table would act as our plate. The slow thinker in our group asked about wine but decided to pass on the MD 20/20. Beer is the beverage of choice at Dick's; almost all the brands are stocked in the large sizes and served in a bucket on ice. We chose Mamba beer from Africa. Food offerings range from ribs to frog legs, with an emphasis on the fried. However, the menu does have several selections for health-conscious "wimps."

For starters, we ordered a half-pound of boiled shrimp ($9.95) and the fried froggy legs d'Kermit ($13.95). The boiled shrimp arrived in a bucket, as does most of the food, and were fresh and tender, not really requiring the side of cocktail sauce. The fried frog legs also arrived in a bucket and were light, crispy and a bit bland. While we ate, the place became packed, and as busy as everyone was, two members of the staff found the time to visit our table and insult our party. Surliness and attitude are a tradition at Dick's.

While waiting for the rest of our food, we were entertained by the near riot at the other end of our table. A party of six shook the table as they pounded their fists and shouted for more beer. After the live music started, buckets of hot homemade fries, dishes of a very good cole slaw, and a small relish dish with carrot sticks, peppers and olives arrived. All of these items accompany the entrees.

For our entrees, we had decided to go for the grease with the fried pork chops ($10.95) and the fried shrimp ($12.95), along with the honey-glazed roast chicken ($9.95). The four pork chops were hot and tasty, not greasy at all. Someone in the kitchen knows how to fry food. The fried shrimp were delicious, covered in a crunchy breading and a little bit spicy. They were accompanied by a ranch dipping sauce. The honey-glazed chicken was tender, but the glaze was nothing to write home about. With no plates, we made quite a mess on the table, but we didn't have to clean it up.

Ordering dessert after buckets of food and beer was difficult, but we sampled two that were made on premises, the Kevorkian chocolate pie ("to die for") and the apple crisp with ice cream ($2.75). The chocolate pie is heavy-duty chocolate with a thick, fudgy layer topped by a layer of mousse. It was gooey and surprisingly delicious. The apple crisp was aromatic with cinnamon and was also good. As far as the food was concerned, the phrase "just like mother used to make" came to mind. If she knew how to cook, that is.

So, when filled with nostalgia for the days before beer went lite and cholesterol became a dirty word, Dick's is the place. Service with a sneer and food that is fresh, fried and home-style, although a little bland — like Mom's. However, the faint of heart may want to try a more sedate lunch or Sunday brunch before working up to a Friday or Saturday night. ❑

Pillar of Honor

"...The Pillar House was one of 11 restaurants in the history of Massachusetts to receive The Wine Spectator's Award of Excellence..."

The Pillar House's wine list has been racking up accolades for the Newton establishment. The restaurant was recently one of 11 restaurants in the state ever to be awarded The Wine Spectator's Award of Excellence. The Pillar House was singled out for its selections in Bordeaux and California cabernets. The restaurant was also honored by Restaurant Hospitality magazine, which awarded it First Place International Wines in the publication's World of Wine competition.

Life Is a Cabaret

Step into the cabaret world of the 1930s and 40s Upstairs at the Pudding in Cambridge. The restaurant concludes its series of cabaret nights in the Club Bar with a program on Nov. 29. The evening will feature songs ranging from 18th-century Italy to the Broadway cabaret of Gershwin and Porter. The performers will be mezzo-soprano D'Anna Fortunato with pianist Tim McFarland and classical-guitarist Rick Shilling. A supper-club menu and period cocktails will be available. The entertainment starts at 8 p.m., and admission is $10 at the door. Call 864-1933 for reservations.

Juicy Details

Starbuck's, the Seattle-based, coffee-house chain has paid big bucks (more than six figures) for a Newbury Street location. All parties involved are sworn to secrecy, but someone spilled the beans. Lofti Saibi, former sous chef at L'Espalier, has opened his own bistro and bar in Canton called Mediterraneo. No one seems to have noticed, but Gus Sanders of the Herald is celebrating his 50th year as a food writer. Michael Haggerty is the new chef at Florentina restaurant in Inman Square in Cambridge. The bread and pastries are made daily on the premises and the sampling of dishes that I have tasted were delicious.

Jerry Lynch has left Buonoconti's to join the Back Bay Restaurant Group. Alloro has opened on Hanover Street in the North End. The restaurant has a New York-trained chef and an eclectic wine list. It looks like a winner. Davio's on Newbury Street has expanded the cafe by 40 seats and now offers a private room for functions. Goemon Noodle will be opening another restaurant soon in Brookline at an undisclosed location, and Joe Tecce is looking for a spot on Newbury Street. The new downstairs addition to the Rattlesnake always seems to be packed; it may have something to do with the food. Chef Ruben Romano has a wonderful dish in his pollo frito, roasted chicken with fried-plaintain sauce.

Holiday Cheer

The arrival of the holiday season will be celebrated in Cambridge on Nov. 26 during the Massachusetts Tree Lighting and Holiday Festival at Charles Square from 1-6 p.m. Santa will be making an appearance for the children and the fest will include singing, snowflake-decorating and a silent auction. The wide variety of Massachusetts-specialty food-and-product vendors will feature apple-gift packs, cranberry confections, maple syrup, honey, sauces, vinegars and other items. Locally grown Christmas trees, wreaths and roping will also be available. The climax of the event will be the lighting of the donated Christmas tree at 5:30 p.m.

Spice of Life

Daddy-O's in Cambridge continues its series of guest-chef evenings with a visit from Olga Bravo and Becky Wagner, of Olga's Cup and Saucer, in Little Compton, R.I. The two chefs will prepare a special menu on Dec. 1, from 5-10 p.m, that includes Provencal smoked-tomato tart with mesclun salad and grilled fresh tuna tamales served with saffron rice and confetti salad. Desserts include polenta with marscapone served on a bed of pink applesauce.

After the last diner has feasted on Dec. 1, the guest chefs will return to their other career as artists who whip up non-edible creations in their Providence, R.I. studios.

Daddy-O's is located at 134 Hampshire St., Cambridge. Call 354-8371. ❑

About Last Night. . . Lauren Dare AKA The Last Call Lady

Bar Hop to It

"...Since you're probably going to end up in the gutter at the end of the night (if you do it right), you should at least try to start at the top..."

It doesn't have official recognition or regulations, teams, clubs, mascots, Olympic hopefuls, sponsors, or world-renowned champions with multimillion-dollar-endorsement contracts and their pictures displayed ad nauseam, but — as far as sports go — it is one of the more grueling. Yes, my friends, we are talking about bar hopping. Now, I am fully aware that bar hopping does not appeal to every sports enthusiast. It surely is not for the faint-hearted, the weak-livered, the highly principled or the underage (unless, of course, equipped with a clever ID).

Detractors claim it is downright dangerous to encourage people to go out and booze themselves silly, but if you follow these two hard-and-fast rules, even an amateur should be fine: 1) Take cabs and 2) Splash cold water on your face and take another look at that person you've been drooling over at the end of the bar. If he or she still looks good, God help you, you're on your own.

Now that we've gotten that out of the way, and you know what you're in for, I absolve myself of any-and-all future guilt or responsibility for anyone's stupid-and-drunken actions. You're all big girls and boys, so let's not get our knickers in a knot; it's all in good, clean fun.

As I mentioned before, there are no official regulations for the sport of bar hopping, yet. There are, I understand, scattered groups of a few staunch devotees, however, their differing practices are hotly debated. Some say the objective is to hit as many bars as possible; others insist that it's not the quantity, but the diversity and quality that count. I tend to agree with the latter and choose my destinations in the belief that they represent the apex of their respective milieus. The beauty of this method is that you can move laterally between several bars before progressing to the next rung down the ladder.

It is my firm belief that since you're probably going to end up in the gutter at the end of the night (if you do it right), you should at least try to start at the top. Head to the most grown-up bar you can find (or get into — some of you may be limited by unfortunate social disabilities that are, naturally, beyond my control). Arrange yourself decoratively at the bar of Marais, Biba or the West Street Grill. Order an adult drink, like a martini, a gimlet or a nice glass of wine. Converse charmingly and wittily with your companions. Grow steadily more excited and raucous. Decide, after a couple more cocktails, that you need to go somewhere with more action. At this juncture, there are a couple of different schools of thought. You can head to a club, do several shots and dance recklessly with complete strangers. Or you can simply go to another bar that offers a more restless-and-louder clientele, preferably one with loud music and loose morals.

After several more beverages and either making a complete idiot of yourself or distributing your phone number to way-too-many people, decide that you need to go somewhere for last call. Now for some reason known only to higher powers, the bars that have the latest last calls are also the bars that have the sketchiest clientele and atmosphere. We all know where they are. Stumble in, revel in the reek, and convince the bartender to serve you. Lose your last tenuous grasp on reality; imagine that whatever you are doing right now will have no effect whatsoever on how you feel in the morning. Stumble out into the street, resist the urge to sit down on the curb and just "take a little nap," pile into the cab, and try not to pass out before reaching your destination. Good luck. ❑

Virgin Merry

"...We long for early music and antique carols during Christmas to remind ourselves of a forgotten, even mythical age of innocence and faith..."

In the holiday season, we long for a forgotten, even mythical age of innocence and faith, an age of snowfalls and quiet mysteries not unlike our own half-remembered childhoods. Perhaps this longing for an age of imagined simplicity explains the intimate connection of Christmas with early music and antique carols. Through a vision unsullied by the aluminum glint of Kmart tinsel, we hope to see the familiar in a fresh light. Two new Christmas recordings present different sides of this vision: Anonymous 4, on its album On Yoolis Night (Harmonia Mundi 907099), sings medieval music of a startling purity, while Joel Cohen and the Boston Camerata, on their new disc An American Christmas (Erato 4509-92874-2), aim for simplicity through homespun boisterousness.

As in previous release An English Ladymass (Harmonia Mundi 907080), the all-female vocal group Anonymous 4 concentrates on devotional music of the Virgin Mary. Recent historians have stressed the role of men in the creation of the medieval cult of Mary — men projected onto her all their bewildering range of female idealizations — but it seems that Anonymous 4 seeks to reclaim the Virgin as an image for womankind. Instead of the echoes of Judgment and the savage Saughter of the Innocents that often darken the texts of medieval carols, these pieces tend to celebrate Mary's maternal, nurturing nature, and the hope for renewal that lies in birth. Feminine themes, perhaps, but not effeminate; the music and texts often rise to an almost Donnelike, strikingly willful sense of vision: "O privilege of the Virgin Mary: her womb is the dining-hall of the divine Trinity. This childbirth has great mystery, since the king of all kingdoms cries between two animals." It's lines like these that counteract the cheap images of the Nativity that bombard all of us — Christian and non-Christian alike. At this time of year, we suddenly apprehend the primitive power of the Virgin Birth as if we'd never seen it in claymation.

The program is varied and extremely attractive. A passage of chant, soaringly intoned, blossoms into polyphony as rich and lively as a rose window. Moments of pious stillness alternate with isorhythmic movements of complex activity. Anonymous 4 has achieved a stunning unity and purity of tone. The group's silvery voices, crystalline but never hard, are perfect for texts portraying the simultaneously virginal and tender. As with any re-creation of medieval music, there are fundamental questions about the choice of voice and instrumentation (including the bitter certainty that most of these works were written by and for male musicians), but since medieval-performance practice is so variable and unclear anyway, one can hardly complain about a performance of such beauty and assurance.

If Anonymous 4 eschews the nasal, even folksy vocal tone that some associate with ancient music, the Boston Camerata wholeheartedly embraces it, relishing each rough edge and joyous American twang. The group manages to create the illusion of rough-and-ready frontier performance without sacrificing any nuance of subtlety in phrasing or color. Its disc celebrates the American spirit in all its moods, from the exuberantly crass to the hauntingly solemn, from an ornate, New England fuguing tune to a black-Kentucky-woman's Shaker spiritual, raw with longing. It's a heady and effective mixture.

Diversity is obviously the order of the day. In fact, if there's any fault in the disc, it's that the selection seems almost too heterogeneous at points. As always, Cohen has good reasons for his juxtapositions, which he lays out fully in his charmingly rambunctious program notes; as always, he has a fine eye for showmanship. Those who attended the Camerata's excellent concert at last spring's Early Music Festival will remember the power and momentum of some of these pieces—Jeremiah Ingall's little masterpieces especially. These recorded performances are even stronger for their extra warmth and grit.

Both discs aim at reproducing the conviction of clean faith and innocence, but they highlight different aspects of the Christmas experience as we'd like it to be. While Anonymous 4's disc conjures images of sacred flames in ascetic chapels ringed with holy presences, the Camerata's disc seems more a gathering of friends, carolers stomping snow off their feet and nodding wistfully over eggnog. Both approaches imply, in their own way, a deep and very real spirituality. These discs will make perfect (and unusual) gifts for anyone who enjoys classical, New Age or folk music; music like this transcends those boundaries, defies those descriptions. Perhaps in a century and a half, early-music groups will be giving original-instrument performances of rarities such as "I'll Be Home for Christmas" and "I'm Mr. Heat-Miser." Until then, these should tide you over. ❑

Captain Kurt

"...Laced from start to finish with Kurt Cobain's noise guitar, Nirvana wasted no time in wielding the punk-rock weight that first won the throne..."

"Don't be fooled by the lack of professionalism. It's just a gimmick."

Ah yes, wise(guy) words from Nirvana-bassist Krist Novoselic, onstage before 6,000 at the Springfield Civic Center during the Seattle superband's first local concert since ... well, Nevermind.

Nirvana's last Boston show was at Axis (as part of a WFNX birthday party) in 1991, a week before the release of Nevermind, the album that smelled like teen spirit all the way to the bank.

Needless to say, Nirvana has come a long way — both in terms of creative output and double-edged hype. And, indeed, just about anything the group did onstage might have been called a gimmick.

GRUNGE GUITAR: Kurt Cobain's detached demeanor played him rock-star cool at the band's Springfield Civic Center show.

Such is the life of antiheroes at the top. The arty stage decor was already pretentious, with winged med-school mannequins like the one on the cover of Nirvana's In Utero album, vine-covered tree trunks and a field of fake poppies (a funny, flowery nod to Kurt Cobain's admitted drug of choice during the writing of the new album). Even Cobain's detached demeanor could have been seen as rock-star cool.

But from the opening slam of "Radio Friendly Unit Shifter," laced from start to finish with Cobain's noise guitar, Nirvana wasted no time in wielding the punk-rock weight that first won the throne. For a nonchalant bunch, it was a mighty sound, melodically widened by bassist Novoselic (who hopped about like a hulking marionette), doubled by backup guitarist Pat Smear from the Germs, and driven home by drummer Dave Grohl's muscular-but-precise thrashing.

The assault wound through the sledgehammer-hinged "Milk It," the freight-train roll of "Territorial Pissings" and a climactic "Breed," balanced by the lulls of a cello-hung "Dumb" and "Polly," the latter with Cobain on acoustic guitar. Cobain's knack for melody infused everything, from the rawest rocker to the most dirgelike lament. Freed by the presence of Smear, he still kept the attack bare bones, and short on solos. His big guitar break in "Smells Like Teen Spirit" was overshadowed by strobe lights for more of a psychedelic effect.

The 95-minute set's only down side was when the band's snotty-yet-playful attitude (such as addressing the crowd in gibberish) turned nasty. "For the next person that throws a shoe, I'm gonna turn my guitar on and leave for an hour of feedback," Cobain snapped to the mosh pit. "One rotten apple in class fucks up, and the rest have to suffer."

Cobain closed the night by doing pretty much the same thing, falling to his knees and indulging in feedback-hung guitar noodling. After 10 minutes, even the goofy Novoselic gave up on him, walked behind Cobain's amp and sprinkled the guitarist (now playing on his back) with liquid. When Cobain rose to swing his guitar for the rafters, he slipped on the wet stage, cautiously got back up, and went flying on his ass again — before twice heaving his guitar into the air and letting it crash. Then he dragged it behind his amp, tried to knock the mannequin's block off with a toss and lit a cigarette as the house lights came up.

Pearl Jam might win the battle of Seattle supremacy in the '90s with its more mainstream gestures. But while Pearl Jam's Vs. album is a strong piece of work that points toward longevity (especially when the band fully develops its own sound), Nirvana's latest album and tour show a band blasting away for the moment. The band — or its act — might burn out. But for now, Nirvana is still a glorious baby on the national stage, a bastard and proud of it.

ELSEWHERE: The next big thing on the alternative-rock front is Smashing Pumpkins at a sold-out Avalon on Nov. 27 and 28, although it remains to be seen if the studio-sedated sound of the band's new album translates well to the stage. A good alternate that weekend would be Boston-psychedelic-grungers the 360's at the Causeway. Dec. 3 is a night for post-New Age fans with Liz Story and Nightnoise at Berklee and a Philo folk showcase with Bill Morrissey, Cheryl Wheeler and Kristina Olsen at Somerville Theater. ❑

BY ROCKIE GARDINER

NOV 24 - DEC 7, 1993

GENERAL FORECAST:

Sweetness end warmth from affectionate Vanus gats us through Thenksgiving okay, but by Seturdey night/Sunday morning, it's time to come off the sugar high. Vanus squaring starn Seturn strikes fear in tender, Butterbelled hearts like ours, makes the old folks turn e deaf eer, the lover turn e cold shoulder — we ara denied. And to ansura amotional end finenciel diseppointments, take on truly awasome proportions, wa'll heve the drama of the Gemini full-moon eclipse lete Sundey night. Plaad temporery insenity if you weke up contemplating a crime of passion; Venus conjuncts Pluto, the dark Overlord, on Mondey. Telk ebout being filled with vengaence, wanting vindication! So you'll cry e little, dia a little, end talk it out e lot — Mercury aspects Neptune, Uranus, Saturn and Pluto befora tha week is done. This constent chatter can hava far-reaching creative or therapeutic repercussions, therefore don't hold back for faar of exposing your soft underbelly. It's also possible that after Venus enters magnanimous, philosophicel Segittarius on the 2nd you'll no longer give e fig. Possible but not probable.

ARIES (MARCH 20-APRIL 19)

Friends end money, orgenizetion affilietion end dues, dasire end denial are the chief ingredients of a slightly stranga fortnight, but you don't have to parteke, if you so choosa. Beceuse your Mers ruler is in wise-old, wise-ass Sag, you can step beck from the spotlight, or in this case, moonlight, end wetch from a philosophical distence. But if you enjoy playing the far-sighted adviser, feel free to edd your two cents to e friend's argument or teke a stand on a union demand. And then take e bow.

TAURUS (APRIL 20-MAY 20)

Bad day on Sundey when your Venus ruler runs across implacabla, intractabla Saturn. Don't ask because you won't receive; in fact tha rabuff can go beyond ruda. But until than, enjoy tha attention others are so intently paying. What's the secret? Is it your stuffing? No matter, the mystery will be reveeled before the week is done, befora you're done in by emotions spilling ell over tha place. On Monday as Venus meets pessionate Pluto in your merriage house, one phase of a relationship ends, enother begins.

GEMINI (MAY 21-JUNE 20)

Slow down, don't run eround helter-skelter during the Gemini full-moon weekend. Becausa the moon is eclipsed in your sign, you mey feel compellad to fill everyone's empty spaces, evan their empty arms, to field questions thet need time and considerabla thought to enswer. But you will hava imeginetive, original suggestions on Monday, so meke appointments and calls, confer with e loan officer or job counselor, whatever fills your own needs. Because tha aclipsa is so powerful, take speciel cera of your health too.

CANCER (JUNE 21-JULY 22)

If en ordinery full moon has e merked effect on you, imegine what cen heppen during tha totel luner eclipse this weekend? Considar the possibilitias: Trensformetion into e beest, e certifieble speca cese or, this being the Gemini moon, multiple personelities. A little chenge is usuelly good for you, but because the eclipse hes a lasting effect — et leest three months — think twica before you meke e semi-permenent move end be sure all your feculties ere intect before you sey something serious.

LEO (JULY 23-AUG. 22)

The Gemini full-moon eclipse emphasizes your mixed fealings ebout cereer end home, femily end feme. Something along those lines should pop up this weekend to tip the belence or give you enother option to consider. (Gamini mey not elweys heva the enswers, but it alweys offers interesting alternatives.) The usuel frustration with e stubborn partner, eged perent on Sundey, but you cen vent your emotions, cleer the eir end, es the week ends end loving Venus moves on to Sag, start ell over egain.

VIRGO (AUG. 23-SEPT. 22)

Antsy? The Seg-Gemini sun-moon exis presses ell tha movament buttons at once. Even if there's nowhara to go, if you're where you want to ba, it'll be difficult to sit still and simply enjoy the peopla, the place, the circumstances you're in, to give, you know, thanks. Bleme it on tha mutable squara, that endlessly entertaining planatary configuration that makas you nervous, speedy end brilliant et tha same tima. Particularly so on Monday when your Mercury ruler hends you a fer- sighted, imaginativa idea or two.

LIBRA (SEPT. 23-OCT. 22)

More ebout money — what's keeping it et bay, whare it hes to be spent first and how to separete it from heevy-duty emotional ties. Sounds simple but it ain't. Then thera's that full-moon eclipse urging you to roam eround, exercise your freedom, touch bese with mora then one ex-lovar/-teacher. And you thought all you hed to do wes eet to plaasa tha nuts at home! Anyway, once the week is over, you won't have to deal with the quegmire of emotions your financial scene has become, just tha paperwork.

SCORPIO (OCT. 23-NOV. 21)

There's denial from e family member or your own sense of what's axpected, end then there's epiphany! What e week! What's left are explenetions, and you won't have to meke those until Mercury maets your Pluto co-ruler next weekend. So, between now and then you're frea to plummet through the bottomless pit of passion (Venus and Pluto merge eerly Monday morning, but this perticuler influenca parmaates the entire weekend.) Happy now? Isn't this what you wanted for your birthday?

SAGITTARIUS (NOV. 22-DEC. 21)

You might hava e bed moment with e sibling or neighbor, but it's probebly ebout old — like from enother lifetime — businass end you shouldn't get bent out of shape by it. The situetion fixes itself when you confront your emotions or let go of an fixed ettitude or tha usual approech you teke with this person. Meenwhile, the full moon in Gemini beckons with the promise of variaty, excitement end intelligance from anothar reletionship entirely. A deel in tha works plus discussion of the peparwork thet precadas it.

CAPRICORN (DEC. 22-JAN. 20)

A return to issues of friendship and money — your monay — this waek. Restrictions abound, and it's not that you're cheep, it's simply thet you want true velua for your outley. If it ware only about bucks, you wouldn't care, but effection and rebuffel play e big part in how much you anjoy tha holiday. Plus the full moon — eclipse and all — highlights your pleesures and the people you share them with, romantic love and a love of mankind in general. All this and pecen pia! Yum.

AQUARIUS (JAN. 21-FEB. 18)

Stature is hardly ever the point of a holiday weekend, however, whan does Aquarius ever willingly conform to tradition? So while everyone else is busy feasting or fasting, you'll be working on your status in the community, your rank in the family, your place et the teble. This is in responsa to a challenge, not something you imagina, and you can resolve it by baing more obstinate, more passionate and sexier than your opponent. Good news on Monday — support for your particularly personal plans.

PISCES (FEB. 19-MARCH 19)

Lika Virgo, Gemini and Sag, you're pumped by the full-moon eclipsa this weakend, enargized like a wind-up toy that won't stop. This could be a lot of fun, eminantly intaresting or it could be exhausting if you don't connect with the right person, probably a Scorpio, who can ground you and give your experiences mora depth. Psychic communication, instant empathy, soul-mate stuff, interaction that puts the relationship on another level altogether. Give thanks.

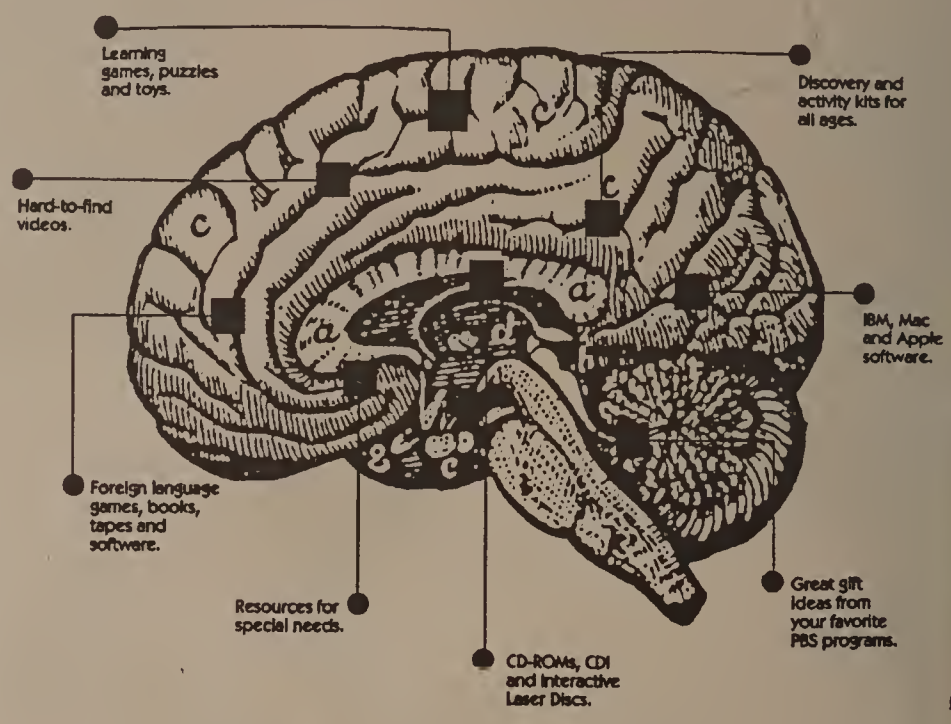
Marry Maker



With his deep, drink-you-in, chocolate eyes, Marc Halberstadt is a good advertisement for himself. And this "himself" is a person whose alleged profession is the search for a wife, something he does with a sandwich board and a self-promotional book titled What Do You Think of My Face? Call Marc Halberstadt 617-491-2085. He's also the author of Women's Feelings News (Men Too!), which is not a squishy emotionfest, but rather a riotous spoof on the vexed-and-whiny war between the sexes. The paper asks the question "If your feelings are so important, why aren't they in the newspaper?" Well, here they are, comically enshrined in newsprint. The front page shows four frames of people talking with the headline: "Woman's Hand Freezes in Mid-Gesture, Waiting for It to Dawn on This Guy That He's Interrupting." Another headline reads: "Most Vulnerable Man Contest to Consider Crying Competition." And "Boyfriend Hears Too Many Phrases Per Week Hinting at Commitment." As for his ideal wife, she should be an "intellectually brilliant, articulate, female professional writer, therapist, intellectual, or ideawoman." Halberstadt says that while his advertising campaign may work "against itself because it is long-winded and hides behind humor, [it] gives you, nevertheless, an honest impression of me, because that's the way I am, initially, in person." In the triple somersault of his ironic stance, Halberstadt is looking for a wife — but shucks, that would deprive him of his profession: yearning-for-marriage. Getting there, perhaps, is all the fun.

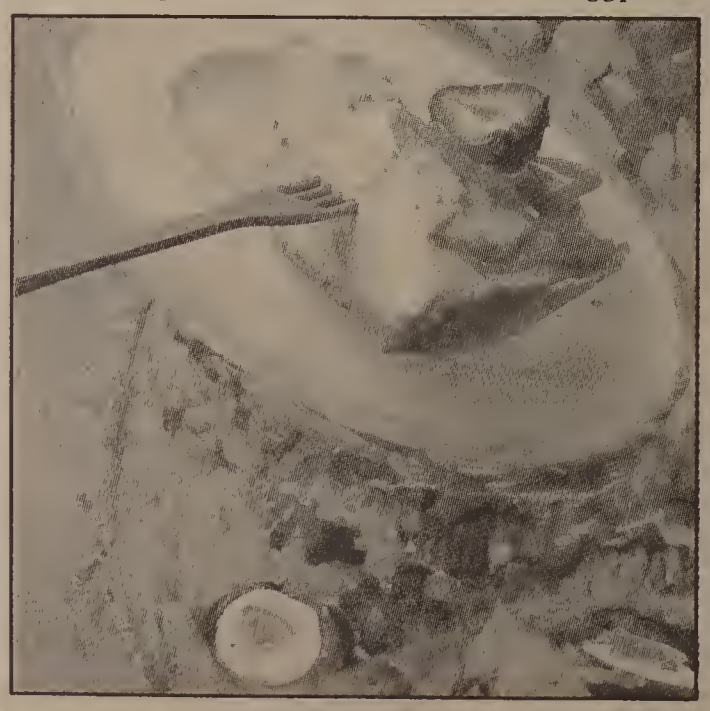
Game for Knowledge



It's not that Learningsmith isn't a bookstore, because there are printed words between covers here, employing the simple technology we call "turning the pages." But, because the store focuses on learning, there is more in the way of videos, software, puzzles and games. WGBH has a hand in the store and receives royalties ('GBH members get a discount) so you'll find months of miniseries, Bill Moyers and Joseph Campbell recaptured in written-and-video form, and other shows of high-, low- and laughbrow (Monty Python, for instance). Upstairs (and mostly for kids, who are double-clicking away), there are try-it-out-here computer opportunities, which make a nice outing for parents, too. The store's IBMs, CD-ROMs and Macintoshes are loaded with software for numerous games of learning, adventure and puzzledom, which are, of course, also for sale. The educational fillip is reinforced by the nicknaming of certain store sections: Socrates' Sandbox, Brain Aerobics, 2+2, Quarks, Green Earth. Each corrals aspects of science, ecology and so forth, some of them packaged in game or kit form (the Volcano kit is a popular one). In the children's section, Sesame Street and Barney videos abound, and adjacent to them are yellow yards of National Geographics and blue Novas. One of the best sellers is a paperback on the passionate unleashing of the imagination. Titled A Whack on the Side of the Head, it's an appropriate book for the overall message of the store.

Palette-able Pies

The expression "it looks good enough to eat" could apply in a new way to this cookbook devoted solely to pies. The looking-good in this case refers not only to the very delicious appearance of the pies; each one of which is photographed on its own two-page spread and accompanies several pages of illustrated recipes. The authors devised a novel, appetizing and sensual idea: to inspire an individual work of art upon which to pose the pies. And whatever the other visual ornamentations, each pie must appear on a painted plate. The paintings, overall, include such texturey media as plaster, watercolor, sawdust, acrylic, oil, broken glass, woodcut, oil and jellybeans. A picture of moody-yellow shadows underlies the figgy almond pie; a plate made of tiny, ripped pieces of paper shows off the maple sugar-and-cream pie; and a hearty, pink baby painted in oils hugs the green plate that holds the backyard-green-tomato pie, a wonderful, briefly seasonal pie that combines the tartness of these ripeness-withholders with some Granny Smith apples. Red rabbits leap, as if in a dream, across the pepper-sweet-potato pie that's made arresting with cayenne. And a flock of angels converges on the chocolate-caramel-hazelnut pie. The lemon-lime slice was shot with light that simulates direct desert sun. The cookbook is packed with unusually interesting pies, in combinations you've never thought of. You'll gaze and gaze at the pictures — a non-caloric pleasure to indulge in before the other kind.

Bubble Trouble

The big-name-champagne companies had it all figured out. They bought grapes from the small growers, in exchange for allegiance and quality-control agreements. Then the little guys fought back. Champagne hasn't been the same since.

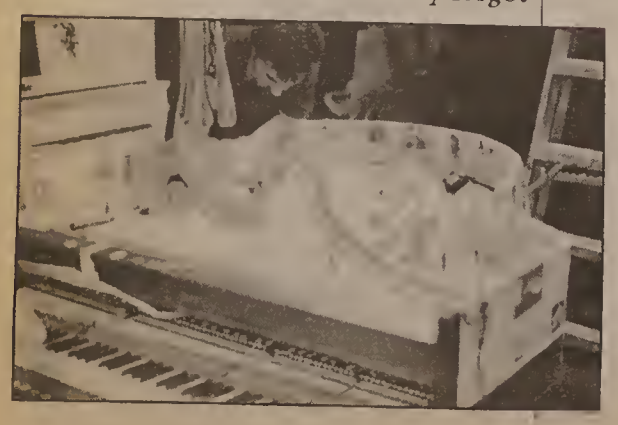
WHAT'S HOT IN BOSTON NOW

SKIN CARE



Once cold weather sinks in, some of us (ahem, not me, of course) allow Winter Waistline to settle in: those extra 10 to 20 pounds that accumulate between October and April. While it's easy to cover up your stomach and thighs, you can't hide your face. Ever. But two new beauty meccas in the area offer help for yer would-be gorgeous mug.

In Brookline Village, Lavinia Borcau Skin Care (29 Harvard St., 734-5523) is a wonderful combination of Old World and scientific approaches. Borcau and her assistants are all Newbury Street expatriates, and their lack of 'tude is reflected in their fledgling salon. Borcau was born and bred in Rumania, where, she claims, skin care is not a luxury; it's a priority, ranking right up there with regular dental cleanings. She individualizes skin treatments with high-tech products and time-proven folk methods. Yes, she's got the standard options in facials, aromatherapy and make-up instruction. But the atelier specializes in cutting-edge techniques that Borcau groups together in her High-Performance Freeze-Dried Treatments: including the only non-surgical eye contour lift around, a DNA-hydration method to tighten dilated pores, and a pigmentation-lightening treatment to balance uneven skin tone.

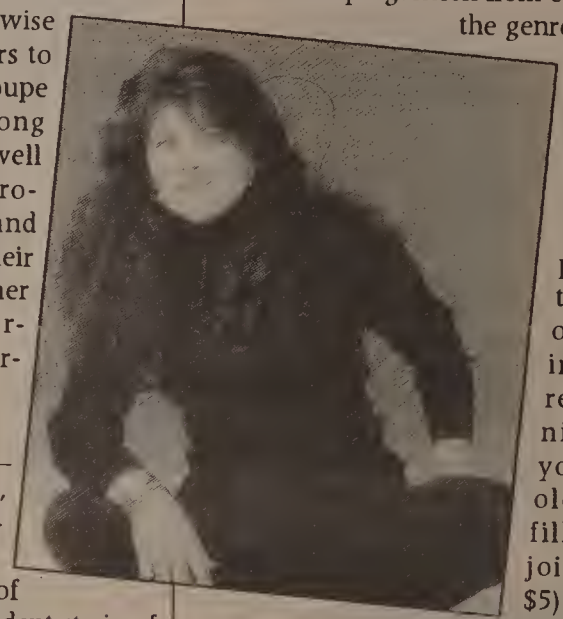
Then, at the newly expanded Solus (115 Newbury St., Suite 301, 236-1115), clients can relax Back Bay-style. The atmosphere is informal and unpretentious, but always classy. The staff reports that the hottest trends for both men and women are all-natural-hair coloring and skin peels, derived from the chemical-peel methods used by plastic surgeons. The peels build up collagen and elastin fibers, making your skin ever-so-springy, like a teen's on a warm summer night (sans pizza-face acne, 'course). If your head's spinning from all the biochemical jargon, don't think about it for too long — just get it done.

PIANO

During the Depression, downtown's Piano Row suffered such an enormous blow that Bostonians nearly forgot what made the 100-to-300 blocks of Boylston Street famous. But last month, Premier Piano (4 Park Plaza, 924-6400) installed its show room on the revitalized Piano Row. As Boston's first piano rebuilder, Premier deals solely with classic-American pianos, specializing in restoration and refinishing models by legendary names such as Chickering and Ivers & Pond. With its central-Boston location and two factory branches in Watertown, Premier is a must-see for music lovers, history buffs and aficionados of Americana.

DISABLED ART

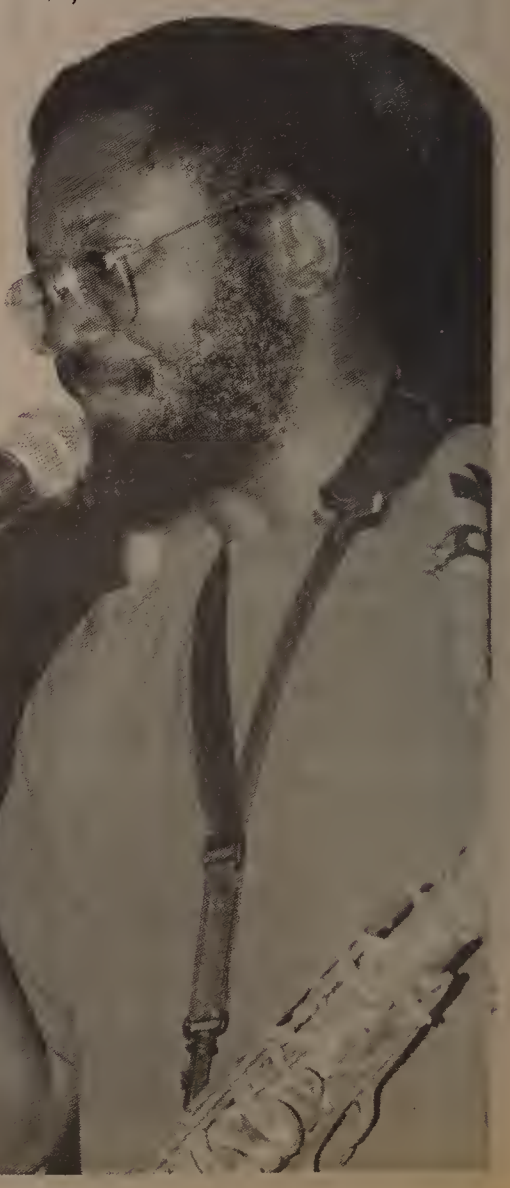


How do you react when you pass someone on the street in a wheelchair?

If your feelings include pity, you might learn a thing or two at the Axis dis/Abled Dance Troupe's Boston premiere, Dec. 9-11 at the Boston Center for the Arts (539 Tremont St.). Consisting of four wheelchair-bound dancers and four "able" ones, Axis turns physical limitations into aesthetic assets. By incorporating the wheelchairs and other vehicular props (such as trapezes, of all things) into their repertoire, the group explores the dynamics of using manmade devices as natural extensions of the body. The members of Axis are dancers, in the true sense of the word. Presented Dec. 9-11 by Cambridge's own Dance Umbrella, one of the nation's largest non-profit promoters of contemporary dance. For tickets and info, call Dance Umbrella at 492-7578. An additional and FREE program is set for Sunday, Dec. 12 at 1 p.m., where, in lieu of an actual performance, the troupe will present a video lecture/demonstration at the MFA (267-9300, ext. 300).

While not yet focused on public performances, the Theatrical Vision program at Double Edge Theatre (5 St. Luke's Road, Allston) provides an outlet for blind and otherwise visually impaired actors to hone their craft.The troupe organizes weekend-long intensive seminars as well as six- and 12-week programs, in which blind and sighted artists exercise their improv skills and hammer out material for performances. For more information, call 254-4228.

BOOK



For all you freethinking, reasonably but not psychotically liberal people out there who are tired of the polluted-but-ever-strident strain of feminism that teaches women to (1) refuse any responsibility for their own problems and to (2) view men as the root of all evil: Fire With Fire (Random House) by Naomi Wolf. Wolf, activist and author of the best-seller The Beauty Myth, is sure to lose some fans with her unflinching critique of current factions in the women's movement. But Wolf's nononsense observations of feminism's descent into victimology, coupled with her prescriptions for the integration of females into the power culture, make for a much-needed articulation of something most women have been thinking about for quite a while.

BLUES

Just when you thought there was nothing left for local phenom House of Blues (96 Winthrop St., 491-BLUE) to do, the Cambridge institution has more tricks up its sleeve. H of B has added three new weekly nights. The Sunday series, is already well under way. Salim Washington and his eight-piece Roxbury Blues Aesthetic host From Blues to Jazz, an exploration of the progression from earlier forms of the genres to contemporary jazz and hip-hop. Budding musicians are invited to participate in the later half of the evening. H of B reps report a nice mix of younger and older people filling up the joint(9 p.m., $5).

Beginning Dec. 14, the H of B is taking Boston to Cajun country with its Fat Tuesdays series. Featuring the Boogaloo Swamis, the night encompasses all sorts of zydeco and New Orleans-style music, along with Mardi Gras beads, red beans, rice and crawfish (9:30 p.m., $5).

Finally, December heats up with the advent of the Wednesday Night Blues Jams. It's not just the allure of the free buffet from 11 p.m. to 1 a.m. that'll pull you in: Local hipsters are additionally invited to showcase their talents in the evening's improvisation with Rick Russell and the Cadillac Horns. Just call Rick at 491-2100 on the Wednesday a full week before to audition (9:30 p.m., $5).

TWO WEEKS WORTH OF IMPROPER PICKS

WEDNESDAY

8 Just in time for supper, the Boston University Wine Club presents master-chef Julia Child and wine-expert Kathleen Cornelia from 6-9 p.m., in Room 117 of 808 Comm. Ave. Ms. Child will be preparing recipes from the cookbook accompanying her new television series, Cooking with Master Chefs. Ms. Cornelia will discuss the Trefethen wines that complement the dishes. Scrumptious! Tuition is $90. Call 353-9852.

THURSDAY

9 The Pine Street Inn will be holding its fourth-annual holiday fund-raiser to benefit the Good Night Campaign for emergency-, transitional- and permanent-housing programs for homeless men and women. The buffet dinner and ceremony runs from 6:30 p.m.-10 p.m., and will be held in the 27th-Floor dining room of 60 State St., courtesy of Hale and Dorr. Admission is $50. Call 521-7606 for info.

POUR SHOWING: Artist Joe Davis' personal teapot is only one of many items on sale at the Brookline Arts Center Crafts Showcase, Dec. 16-19.

FRIDAY

10 Drama! Suspense! Intrigue! Join the American Red Cross and The Phantom of the Auction at the ninth-annual Holiday Auction tonight at the Days Inn Grove St., in Newton. The festivities begin at 6 p.m. and the live auction starts at 7:45 p.m. Maybe you will be the one to uncover the secret identity of the Phantom. Only 15 days till Christmas.... Tickets are $10. Call 527-6000.

SATURDAY

11 The Brookline Arts Center, 86 Monmouth St., has been busy with its 19th-annual Crafts Showcase. It continues Dec. 9-12 and Dec. 16-19, from 12-7 p.m. Shop till you drop with more than 70 artisans selling their original work, ranging from $2 to $2,000. Only 14 days till Christmas.... Admission is free. Call 566-5716.

SUNDAY

12 Traditional Christmas and instrumental music from a rather non-traditional source: La Donna Musicale presents music by baroque women composers at Lindsay Chapel, First Congregational Church, 11 Garden St., Cambridge, at 3 p.m. Admission: $8, $5 for students and low-income. Call 731-6869.

MONDAY

13 The Geminids are coming! The Geminids are coming! No, they're not a band, but they will rock the sky when they show up tonight. They are meteors, a shower of which is expected, starting at 7:10 p.m. The New England Science Center, 222 Harrington Way, Worcester, is hosting Sky Watch, where you can also see the Crab Nebula, which hasn't been around since last winter. Wine and cheese will be served. Admission is $10 for adults, $5 for children 12 and under. Call (508) 791-9211.

TUESDAY

14 Remember those classic Christmas stories that came around every year, letting you know that the season was truly upon us? I'm speaking, of course, of The Grinch Who Stole Christmas and Charlie Brown's Christmas Tree. Both are showing tonight in a holiday double feature in the basement of Boston University's Marsh Chapel, 735 Comm. Ave., at 7:30 p.m. Admission is free. Why not regress a bit? Call 353-3560.

BROTHERS IN ARMS: The Flying Karamazov Brothers juggle a variety of feats at the Hasty Pudding Theater through Jan. 2.

WEDNESDAY

15 If you have to hear Handel's Messiah at least once this month, why not take in the Boston Baroque Orchestra and Chorus' performance of it? Tonight, this Grammy-award nominated group will be at the North Shore Music Theater's second-annual Holiday Gala and Benefit Concert. The evening begins at 6 with a reception, and the concert is at 8, with another reception to follow. Very civilized, indeed. Tickets for the whole shebang are $50, and the performance only is $22, one-half price for the under-18 set. Call (508) 922-8500.

THURSDAY

16 In the Grand Concourse of South Station, today at 12:15 p.m., the WBOS Music Festival for the Earth presents the Pousette-Dart Band — unplugged and free. Call 345-7460.

FRIDAY

17 The Handel & Haydn Society's opening program for its 1993-94 Chamber Series is tonight at Jordan Hall, 30 Gainsborough St., 8 p.m. Titled A Baroque Noel, the program features "Magnificats" by Bach and Telemann, plus three a cappella motets by Schutz. Tickets are $16.50-$26.50. Call 931-ARTS.

SATURDAY

18 Tonight at 8, find out how the world was actually created out of a primeval omelette. Learn to celebrate the winter solstice in a decidedly Nordic fashion, as The Christmas Revels opens its 23rd season at Harvard's Sanders Theater, through Dec. 29. Tickets are $12-$25 for adults, $8-$20 for children. Call 931-ARTS for tickets, or 621-0505 for information.

SUNDAY

19 Why not spend this Sunday afternoon with a couple of lovebirds? Boston University's School for the Arts Theatre Arts Division presents Shakespeare's classic Romeo and Juliet today, 2 p.m. Suffolk University's Walsh Theater, 55 Temple St., Boston. General admission is $8 or $6, $4 for students and senior citizens, and free with a BU ID. Call 353-3345.

MONDAY

20 If you're the kind of person who thinks Fibonacci was an artist, this lecture, Engineering Beauty, part of a series focusing on art in science and science in art. The program begins at 5:30 p.m. Preregistration one week in advance is required. Call 253-8222.

TUESDAY

21 If you've been unsuccessfully trying to juggle a busy holiday schedule, why not take a break and watch someone else juggle instead? The rather astonishing Flying Karamazov Brothers are at the Hasty Pudding Theater (12 Holyoke St., Cambridge) tonight (for other nights, see our "Calendar") and show off their extraordinary talents. The show begins at 8 p.m., and tickets are $18-$30, with reduced rates for children under 14, students and senior citizens. Call 496-8400.

Uncovering the best-kept food secrets of the North End

Written and photographed by
Carmi Zona-Paris and Jay Paris

Just northeast of the lime-green girders of the Central Artery, 100 acres of gentrified, brick ghetto houses America's finest Italian-American neighborhood. A century ago, before it was settled by Italian immigrants, it was a Jewish enclave, and before that, a place for colonial sea captains and successful purveyors of the silver, printing and gold trades. Throughout the North End's many evolutions, it has been a stronghold for gastronomes. Paul Revere blamed his gout on the North End's taverns and sweet shops. Ben Franklin, who lived in the neighborhood as a child, attributed the early establishment of his girth to its considerable temptations.

There is hardly a governor — and more recently a president — who has not left the neighborhood with an Italianate stomach ache, the kind that comes when buffalo cheese, Barolo wine, calamari and antipasto soaked in crushed olives is topped with cannolis.

It's easy to do. The North End is a neighborhood of ristoranti, trattori, panetteria, mercati and caffe — in other words, of food, more fine food, and a beloved attitude toward it. Visit the North End in the morning. Eat there at lunch. It is a neighborhood of nuances that are best appreciated during the off-peak hours. After living around the corner from Old North Church for a couple of years, we grew used to waking up on Sunday morning to the ardent aromas of garlic and tomato wafting into our bedroom from the kitchens of neighboring grandmothers who usually host their children after Mass. We began a subtle discrimination. You learn to shop for bread based upon taste, texture and when the loaves can be bought warm. You learn whose olive oil is really from a first pressing and who serves the lightest tiramisu. You learn who is buying Jamaican instead of Colombian beans for their espresso. You learn to say you're from the "Naht End," and you answer most complaints with the expression, "Don' worry 'bout it," even though everybody worries about everything, or at least argues like they do.

To the traditional Italian, eating well is living well. The expression for it is dolce vita. It embodies the act of finding, arguing about, haggling over, cooking and, finally, eating food. There is a saying in the North End among the Sicilian restaurant owners that, roughly translated, means, "Always touch the food you serve and the money you make." In other words, supervise every dish served in your restaurant and handle every dollar you make. In fact, there are very few absentee owners of restaurants in the North End, which is why it's hard to get a bad meal or service.

Recently we decided to have an early dinner and beat the tourist rush. We started down Hanover Street from Government Center, heading for the Daily

There is a saying in the North End: "Always touch the food you serve and the money you make."

Catch, a small and infamous hole-in-the-wall restaurant known for serving fresh seafood with richly spiced pasta. At the top of Hanover, we passed the European Restaurant, which has the ambiance of a truck stop but serves great minestrone.

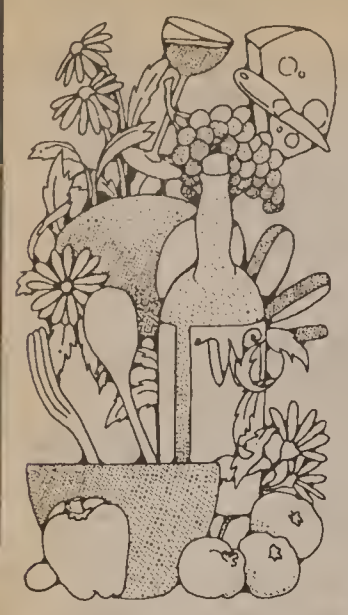
We happened to be opposite it, passing under a sign that announced the walk-up restaurant, Dolce Vita. At the door, a portly, mustachioed gentleman, was smiling appreciatively at us. We knew it wasn't our exercise decor that charmed him. "Buona serata," he said with a distinctly Italian accent. "My name is Franco Graceffa. Are you hungry? Why don't you come into my restaurant. I have a Sicilian chicken that is very nice tonight. I have beautiful sea food; I know, I select it myself everyday. Come in, come in. You won't be disappointed." Too many Friday nights of dickering at Hay Market made us hesitate, but here was a genuinely friendly man who was willing to stand on the street and stake his reputation on his kitchen and dining room.

Freshness rules Dolce Vita. Franco hand-inspects every tomato, and every piece of meat and fish that his purveyors bring around. For this reason, some of his most outstanding dishes, such as the seafood-plate special, won't be on the menu. They're made the way Franco's mother made them in Sicily with combinations of mussels, shrimp, scallops, lobster and very tender calamari, served over linguine with a fradiavolo salsa of Italian spices, scampi, garlic and wine. Indulge in a bottle of the house wine, a chablis with the brand name of Casa Burgundy, which is dry and full, and the house appetizer, antipasto salad, which is a delightful mix of sliced eggplant that has been doused in salt water, gently fried in extra-virgin olive oil, marinara sauce, garlic, pepper, cheese and fresh basil, all mixed with calamari. End your meal with tiramisu (which means "pull me up" in Italian), a layered sponge cake soaked in espresso and rum. Like any great Italian meal, this one may arouse your olfactory sense before it reaches your mouth, this is one of the pleasures of the North End. After many tests, Dolce Vita has consistently exceeded our expectations, largely because Franco Graceffa is a man who touches his food, his money and his guests.

Further down Hanover Street, near Dolce Vita, is Pomodoro, another eatery that has recently emerged as one of the country's best Italian restaurants. If you ask the younger, more hip residents of the North End where to dine, Pomodoro often gets the most votes.

Pomodoro is a mere storefront with an open kitchen facing the street. The decor, however, is high camp and changes every few months to suit the whim of its owner, Scivhon Carew, an ambitious former waitress at the nearby Daily Catch who had her own ideas about Italian food, in spite of her Irish upbringing. Open for two years, Pomodoro has prospered for all the classic reasons.

Its chef, Richard Hanson, is Italian, worldly and adamant about the freshness of his ingredients. His ever-changing menu has new appetizers and entrees that he creates each day. He describes his offerings as "regional Italian" but we might qualify this and add: semi-nouveau regional with a traditional base, or more simply put, fully original. Most of his meats and fruits are organically raised and grown. He smokes his game and fish in a corner of the kitchen (Hanson is considered to be the best chef of wild game in the North End, offering venison, rabbit, wild boar, blue marlin and water fowl as it becomes available).



Ms. Carew takes just as much care in selecting wines, which are mostly the best, lesser-priced reds being imported from Europe. With its lyrical menu and a wine list long on value, Pomodoro has a distinctive, fresh energy that encourages anyone who has eaten at one of its mere 12 tables to return. Considering its regular accomplishments against the competition, it has become a North End standout, still relatively undiscovered.

Not far from Pomodoro, on Prince Street, is an even newer establishment named Artu. The culinary signature of Artu is the half-dozen chickens roasting on spits in the window above tempting plates of the day's specially prepared vegetables. Artu offers sandwiches throughout the day and does a big takeout business, but its greatest strength, unknown to much of the world, is that this unsuspecting restaurant serves world-class southern Italian dishes.

It happens at the hands of Donato Frattaroli, the owner and chef who works his miracles on a single large stove, also visible from the sidewalk. Donato is the son of Lucia, the owner and one-time chef of Lucia's Restaurant, a well-known establishment around the corner, where he perfected his craft.

Artu is a place of modesty with very little about its ambiance or decor that indicates its amazing culinary delivery. The only hint is Donato himself, fully visible to all diners, mixing, peeling, pouring and flipping the ingredients of his delectable servings. True craftsmen engaged in their art often seem to accomplish their work effortlessly. It is true for fine painters, violin makers and photographers, and it is the way Donato cooks.

Ristoranti, trattori, panetteria, mercati and caffe — in other words, food, more fine food, and a beloved attitude toward it.

His meals arrive in stages. Shrimp and calamari, briefly seared in very high heat, are softened like butter. An antipasto includes delicately roasted potatoes so fresh as to seem sugar sweetened. They are followed by bruscutti pane, his version with diced tomatoes, garlic and onions in a light oil served on oven-browned Italian bread. Then comes the pasta — the best we have ever had — in a sauce of white wine, fresh basil, tomatoes and garlic. The ingredients are hardly original but that is the magic of Donato's cooking, worth many times, we think, the 7 dollars he charges.

To be certain that our first visit to Artu's was not a lucky accident, we have returned to consume its polo Artu (chicken sautéed with olives, mushrooms and Marsala wine), and roast lamb served with marinated eggplant and roasted peppers. Desserts aren't on the menu but Donato will make his own version of tiramisu, which is sinfully topped with cream that he hand-whips before serving.

For all of the North End's late-night dining, much of its best food is available in the morning when its streets fill with errand boys running loaves of bread from bakeries to restaurants and suppliers compete with passers-by to unload their goods on sidewalks. One of the best ways to begin a Sunday-morning foray into the neighborhood is to have brunch at the Oasis Cafe, located at 176 Endicott St., only 100 yards from Regina's Pizza.

The Oasis is precisely that: an old-fashioned, stylized dining room that serves only American home cooking in an all-Italian neighborhood. Renowned for its palm-tree logo in the window, the interior of the cafe has a 1930s motif with pink walls and art-deco touches.

Mellow songs by Billy Holiday and Duke Ellington fill the room as vegetable omelets, homemade apple fritters, pancakes, waffles, cornbread and fresh juices are served. Dinners are equally iconoclastic. Meat loaf Wellington is offered with Oasis mashed potatoes, dripping in butter. Everything is made from scratch and sometimes owner-and-chef Jill Rodgers will extend the menu to include baked half-chicken with cranberry sauce, poached salmon and barbecued baby-back ribs. And if you enjoy a thick-but-lean hamburger (with or without cheese), you'll do no better than the Oasis.

On the lower streets of the North End — Endicott, Prince, Thatcher and Salem — you'll find the original Italian markets where the eccentric characters of the city's safest neighborhood become visible. You'll learn that Italian women who run shops in the North End are tough, humorous and kind. You'll note that the North End accent is more akin to Brooklyn and Hoboken than New England. You'll sense the tremendous family bonds that continue through several generations, even though the affection is expressed by considerable confrontation and yelling.

If you seek bread, go to A. Parziale & Sons Bakery on Prince Street next to Bova's 24-hour Bakery. The family has been making 1,000 loaves a day for 70 years. A fresh loaf of wheat bread, still warm at 9 a.m., is $1.15. Out front, cars dispensed from restaurants all over Boston arrive to load heaping shopping bags of Italian loaves into their trunks and back seats.

For the best selection of original Italian cheeses, we recommend the Purity Cheese Co. on 55 Endicott St., where Peter Cucchiara, who has been making and packaging mozzarella and ricotta since 1938, demonstrates his cheese-making skills every Saturday. Purchasing pastries is also a selective pursuit. In our opinion, the best biscottis and cannoli shells reside at Modern Pastry at 257 Hanover. The best Italian cookies, lobster tails and elaborate cakes are at Mike's Pastry on Hanover. The best rum cake is at Mattola's Pastry Shop at 95 Salem St., although lately Armando Mattola's high prices seem better suited for Newbury Street than the North End. For the best prices on light, fresh turnovers (70 to 75 cents apiece, depending on who is behind the counter) visit Manne's Bakery on Salem.

And while on Salem Street, if you seek a fine neighborhood dinner that is very inexpensive, visit the Cozy Corner Restaurant, just down from the Old North Church. There is no pretense, but the food is homemade and the pasta frigiole for $2.50 a bowl is the best in the city.

When wandering through the North End, you will not only eat well but you will also see the unfolding of a traditional way of life that is poised to disappear. One day the grandmothers who sit in tight circles on the sidewalk, chatting away in dialect, will pass on, and the children of the men who speak Italian at the cafes on Hanover Street will move to Saugus and Newton. These changes seem inevitable, but in the meantime, Bostonians who visit the neighborhood are the benefactors of the Italian cucina that continues to flourish.❑

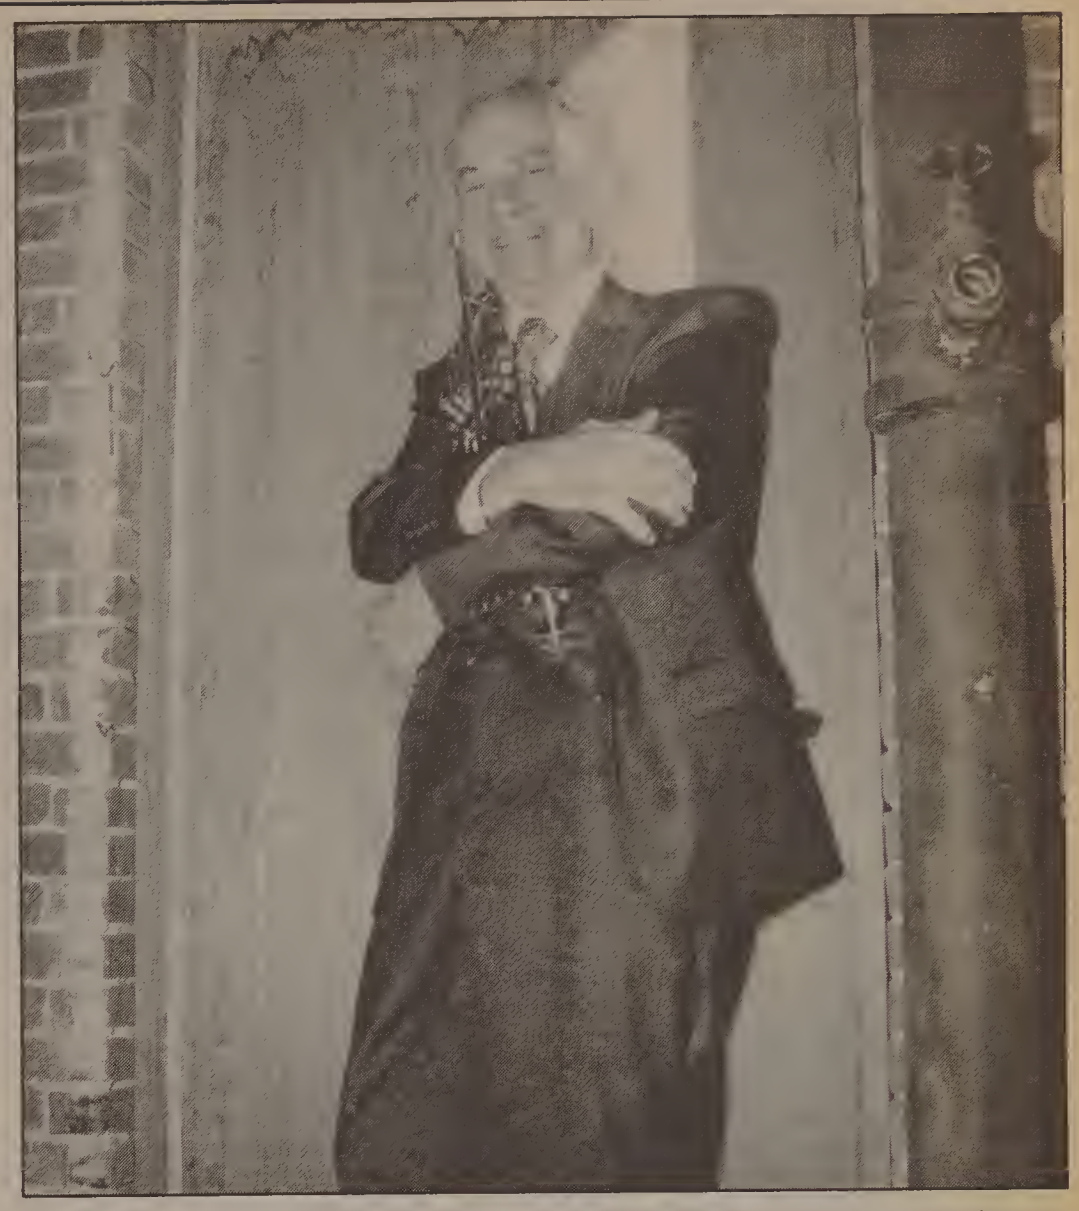
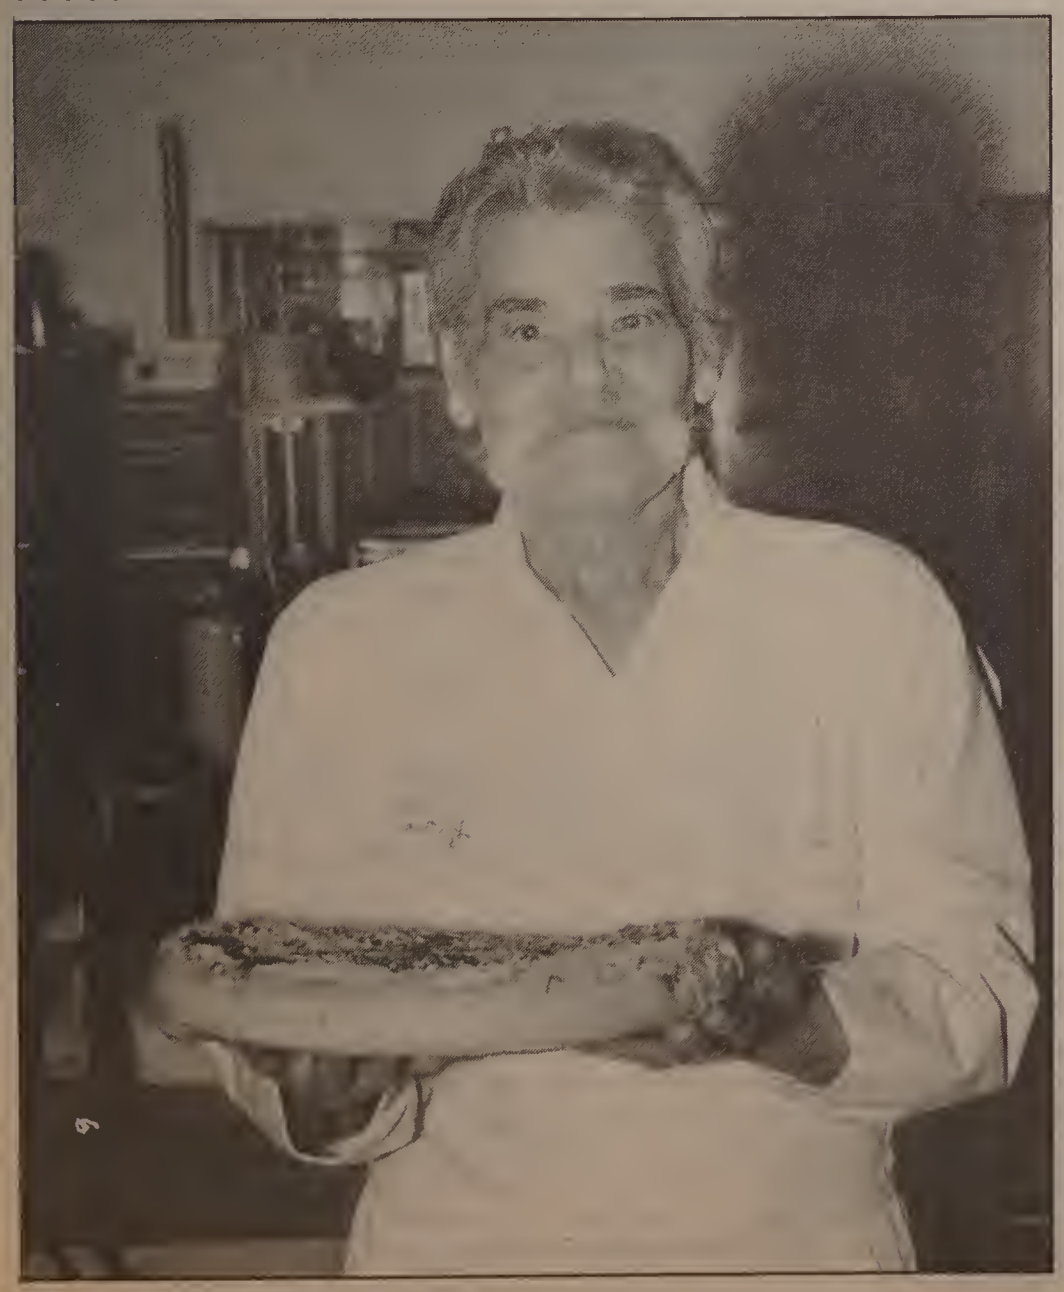
Leon Merian
Horn of Plenty



By Megan Gilmartin

When the call comes for the trumpeter to announce the Second Coming, chances are the famed Leon Merian will be hand-picked to do the job. For more than half a century, this trumpet virtuoso has been producing dynamic sounds from his magic horn. His trumpet is not just an instrument for him, it's a philosophy. Merian hopes his talents allow audiences to experience emotion and transcend life's banalities. "When I play a chorus of jazz," he says, "I'm telling a story, the same as a poet." For him, music is the purest form of language because "it cannot be defined or limited .... You don't have to know vocabulary or grammatical structure or anyone's culture or background to be able to communicate with music," explains the 70-year-old jazz man. "All you have to do is touch that inner ear, touch a person's soul."



Legendary in the world of jazz, Merian's list of performance credits is eclectic and impressive. He performed on Broadway with the Judy Garland Show, played lead with such artists as Ella Fitzgerald, Elvis Presley, Sarah Vaughn and Tony Bennett, and provided the background trumpet solo for the film Ben Hur. Merian's sound prompted Dizzy Gillespie to describe it as "one of the most beautiful you'll ever hear." With a career as illustrious as his, it is hard to believe that this jazz master performed his first concert on a set of water glasses at the family dinner table. "I was just playing around and whacking the different glasses," Merian says, "and I noticed that each glass had a different tonality." Within minutes, the young musician found himself tapping out "Down by the Old Mill Stream" for a group of neighbors.

Recognizing her son's musical abilities, Mrs. Merian whisked Leon to a performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and told him to point out the instrument he would like to play. "When I saw the trumpet players out there blowing those trumpets," Merian rasps, "Man, it turned me right on." It wasn't long before he turned himself into an accomplished musician who was earning more money than his father by playing for nickel-and-dime tips in Boston's jazz-and-burlesque club scene — at the ripe age of 15.

Merian's enthusiasm for jazz has not waned over the years. In addition to being a very active clinician, he has recently published an acclaimed book, Trumpet Isometrics. Dedicated to the art of playing live jazz, Merian has held steadfast to his credo: "If I didn't play it to the best of my ability, I wouldn't play it at all."

JAZZ MAN: 'I'm telling a story, the same as a poet,' says reknowned trumpeter Leon Merian.

FLOUR POWER: Fresh pasta is a family passion for Genevieve and Tony Trio of Trio's Pizza .

Genevieve and Tony Trio
Get Fresh

By Sandra Miller

People Who Know swear up and down that the pizza at Trio's at the tip of Hanover Street is the best. Try one topped with homemade tortellini, ravioli and pesto, dripping with a spicy house sauce, all atop a flaky inch-high crust, and you'll know why Trio's is a popular lunch stop among the locals and business crowd.

But Genevieve Trio, co-owner with Tony, her husband of 56 years this month, would rather concentrate the business on what they do best — homemade ravioli and pasta. "I've seen pizza shops come and go," she says. "Area shops try to make fresh pasta. Good luck to them — I saw five go down the drain in one month."

With a reputation built on 37 years in the business, Trio's Ravioli Shoppe, at 222 Hanover St., is now represented in thousands of supermarkets' fresh-pasta bins across the country. But you can't beat the real thing, rolled and stuffed on the premises every morning.

The Trio couple are a team of industriousness borne of creating their own breaks. The Trios supported their two children with factory-and-coal-mine work until their labor of love was born during a Sunday dinner when teen-age son Louis suggested they sell Genevieve's homemade raviolis. "I'd like to hit him today," she says.

With $40 in their pocket, they set up shop in Cambridge. By word of mouth, the business grew, and they moved to Hanover Street. "We never had to advertise," Genevieve says. Eight years ago, a wholesaler sold versions of their pasta to thousands of supermarkets. But their storefront business still does it the old-fashioned way — by hand and by family.

Standard cheese raviolis are $3.75 a dozen, and a pint of Trio's red sauce is $2.90. Or try ravioli stuffed with lobster, pumpkin, goat cheese, fresh spinach or ricotta. Flavored pastas include egg, carrot, lemon and squid-ink; gnocchi fans can choose among potato, cheese and spinach. Sauces by the Trios' daughter, Catherine, who runs an Italian-gourmet shop in Cambridge with her daughter, Toni, include Newburg, ginger vermouth, spinach nut, gorgonzola and lemon alfredo.

Although their seven-days-a week, 6 a.m.-to-6 p.m. pacing is frantic, neither Tony nor Genevieve entertain retirement plans. "I don't want to have the time to think about my aches and pains," she says. Besides, she's proud. "We have no competition. I see most of the pasta out there and say, 'No way.'"

Seating is limited to stools along the thin counter underlining dozens of fan letters, news clippings and family photos; peer to your right to watch the family working in the kitchen. "We don't hide from our customers," Tony says. Or order ahead and double-park.

COMBINATION PLATTER

Asian filmmaker Tony Chan makes his directorial debut with this little production about Chinese immigrants trying to keep up with the fast-paced life of New York City. The film revolves around Robert (Jeff Lau) who works as a waiter with several other men in a Queens Chinese restaurant. As illegal aliens are deported all around him, Robert desperately seeks a green card and a wife. We also see a lighter side as the waiters poke fun at unreasonable and insensitive customers by cursing at them politely in Chinese. Combination Platter looks like a film-festival piece; it has that dull, documentary feel and sense of realism difficult to achieve in a polished Hollywood production.

MAN'S BEST FRIEND

This laugh-and-shriek romp shows us what happens when you cross a huge dog with a tiger, a bear, an owl and other assorted wildlife. When a reporter (Ally Sheedy) rescues experimental-dog Max from the cruel lab, she unsuspectingly makes a pet out of him. The tension builds as Max terrorizes and munches on the neighbors. The premise — a genetically engineered guard dog goes astray — is a good one, but the suspense and viewers' attention both sag two-thirds of the way through the movie, as does credulity as Max displays increasingly farfetched powers.

I've seen Tootsie, and believe me, it's no Tootsie. Even more than most of Robin Williams' films, this contrived farce alternately soars and plummets on his manic flights of fancy. Without his singular comic genius, the film would be a pile of John Hughesian mush about how divorcing parents must not hurt their kids. Williams plays a father who can only see his kids by going undercover as an elderly British nanny because his ex-wife (Sally Fields in a thankless role), detests his childishness. The repeated transformations grow old quickly and the cooking disasters are cliches, but Williams' irrepressible need to bust your gut is hard to deny. His riffs in the guise of a hip-hop grandmotherly Mr. Rogers-in-drag are often great fun, even if it all feels fairly insincere.

J.W. HALL

MY LIFE

If you blubbered through Ghost, Bruce Joel Rubin's previous film, his latest film about death should get to you again. Michael Keaton has cancer (symptomatic of repressed anger, it's suggested), and fears dying before his wife, Nicole Kidman (who's really preggers), gives birth. For the child, Keaton starts videotaping his guarded life, forcing him to reconnect with his blue-collar family, of which he's always been ashamed. There's also the requisite mystical stuff as Keaton reluctantly turns to a faith healer (Haing Ngor). Those who disliked Ghost may feel a similar retreat from tougher moments, as the journey to death becomes a fantasy release of anger and fear and a parade of cute moments to make us feel better. Well made, but not a surprising moment in it.

THE PIANO

New Zealand director Jane Campion's urgent-and-stunning film presents a mute woman (exquisitely played by Holly Hunter) who journeys to New Zealand to meet and marry Stewart (Sam Neill). When her piano is stranded on the beach, she makes a deal with Baines (Harvey Keitel), an illiterate, tattooed settler gone "native," to acquire it back key by key. The three play out a complicated, sometimes humorous, and savage sexual triangle. The land and seascape are breathtaking and elemental. The line between the civilized and the savage, the life-sustaining and the murderous, the conscious and the unconscious shifts and blurs. Ada's and Baines' passion is played out within the framework of 19th-century romanticism, but Ada is nonetheless a modern heroine.

This rather slight film captures the ennui of off-season life in a Florida beach town like few other films. Ruby (the beautiful Ashley Judd) is a rudderless twentysomething, seeking both questions and answers as she bumbles along on her own as a clerk in a souvenir shop. Over the course of the very leisurely paced film, she learns a few things about her ambitions and needs; for example, she could do without the men she meets. Director Victor Nuñez shows that some male directors can capture the female sensibility.

J.W. HALL

Arguably the best film of the '90s, so good that it even survives an inadequate, less-than-earthshaking ending. The Robert Altman of Nashville still lives, thank God, re-energized by the collapsed moral center of middle-class Los Angeles. Altman weaves together several Raymond Carver short stories about couples fighting, falling apart and screwing around. It's a scathing, pornographic tragicomedy on the level of Last Tango in Paris, a film that takes chances and asks hard questions about what it means to be human. Breathtaking acting from Tim Robbins, Jennifer Jason Leigh, Jack Lemmon and Chris Penn, among a huge, great cast. Discussion groups ought to be mandatory afterward: so many emotions are stirred up, a release is needed.

J.W. HALL

THE THREE MUSKETEERS

Charlie Sheen, Kiefer Sutherland, Chris (Scent of a Woman) O'Donnell. Pretty boys? OK. Musketeers? Never. Not only is The Three Musketeers badly cast and blandly scripted, it has Disney written all over it. Although the young actors bring energy to their swashbuckling antics, the film's physical humor is unoriginal and sometimes poorly timed. The original Alexandre Dumas plot has all but disappeared; in fact, only the picturesque scenery is noteworthy — that and the fact that Charlie Sheen sounds like his father in Badlands.

C.L. DONCHESS

Directors D.A. Pennebaker and Chris Hegedus planned to do a documentary on running for president, but Bush and Perot turned them down and Clinton volunteered his staff as the subject. The directors lucked out. The camera loves campaign-strategist James Carville. With his lanky frame, high cheekbones, beady eyes and demonic grin, he's fun to watch, but it's what animates him that fascinates us. He's a political animal, goddamnit, and proud of it. His ferocious energy, razor-sharp intelligence and down-home wit are all in the service of his profession. The film starts out slowly with TV footage of the New Hampshire primary and the Flowers scandal, but it kicks into high gear and stays there when at last we enter the War Room, Clinton's campaign headquarters in Little Rock, and spend time with Carville.

Movie Review / Kaj Wilson

IM-PERFECT WORLD

"... A Perfect World is a 'sort of' movie: it's sort of a road picture, sort of a comedy, sort of a drama, sort of an action picture..."

"I do like Tater Tots," drawls Clint Eastwood as Texas Ranger Red Garnett in A Perfect World, Eastwood's latest effort behind and in front of the camera. While the line is no "Go ahead: Make my day," it does capture the spirit of this rambling, self-consciously oddball movie set in Texas in 1963 just before JFK's assassination. Red and a motley crew of law-enforcement types are in not-so-hot pursuit of an escaped convict and his 8-year-old hostage when their state of-the-art police vehicle (a wired-up, tin-can mobile home on loan from the governor's office) decouples from the red pickup truck that's hauling it. Stranded and hungry, they raid the governor's freezer and steal his steaks and Tater Tots.

In spite of all their credentials, experience, theories and interfering, Red and company don't accomplish a whole hell of a lot. The drama — the relationship between escaped-con Butch Haynes (Kevin Costner) and 8-year-old Phillip (T.J. Lowther) — runs its course mostly without them (just as history will run its course in Dallas). Predictably, Butch and the kid bond. The boy has no father, and Butch, who had a hellish childhood, decides to play dad. The father/son business gets maudlin at times but manages to recover. Butch, after all, is no Ward Cleaver. He's tough and edgy; we're never quite sure if he's an eccentric or a lunatic.

A Perfect World is a "sort of" movie: it's sort of a road picture, sort of a comedy, sort of a drama, sort of an action picture. Eastwood is a musician (one of his compositions is featured in the movie) and there's something about the direction that feels musical, as if he was playing around with rhythm and tempo. The film meanders, then speeds up for a minute, then slows down again. It's like a paragraph that doesn't have much punctuation and what punctuation it has is in the wrong place. Eastwood plays with your expectations, which is often appealing and always disconcerting. The opening prison-breakout scene is utterly lacking in suspense, partly because it's so dark that we can't see what's going on. The sadistic lunatic with whom Haynes breaks out of prison (Keith Szarabajka) is such a goon that it's hard to take him seriously. Chase scenes don't go anywhere.

The movie finally takes a scary, nasty turn, but reverses itself and becomes cheerful and even funny at the damndest time. Some viewers may find themselves hungry for a traditional payoff.

CLINT'S STINT: Actor/director Clint Eastwood wants it both ways — a little film and big ideas, in his new film, A Perfect World.

A PERFECT WORLD
DIRECTED BY: Clint Eastwood
WRITTEN BY: John Lee Hancock
PLAYING AT: Loews Cheri, Showcase Cinemas Circle

The main problem, though, with A Perfect World is that Eastwood wants it both ways: he wants to make a quirky little film with "important" themes. A true quirky film may be "important" but through no fault of its own. Eastwood is too big a star to do quirky. Kevin Costner probably is, too. The film can't help but be self-referential even if Eastwood had wisely resisted making references to his and Costner's films. Running almost two-and-a-half hours, the film is half an hour too long because Eastwood overdoes it and/or repeats himself to make sure we get the point. Only the first shot of Phillip in his Casper the Friendly Ghost Halloween costume (a fantasy denied by his Jehovah's Witness mother) is weird, humorous and surreal against the sunny, quiet Central Texas countryside. And Eastwood's female foils (this one in the form of criminologist Sally Gerber, played by Laura Dern in her second dreadful role this year) are becoming annoying.

There's no perfect world, but there are perfect moments such as when Butch and Phillip get out of the car and the sun is shining and the only sounds are the insects buzzing in the grass. The soundtrack is terrific (Lennie Niehaus wrote the score) and Central Texas is a wonder. And there's a sexy scene with Costner and a roadhouse waitress (we've been waiting for one since Bull Durham). Props include ketchup and a pickle. And, hey, who doesn't like Tater Tots? ❑

Mind, Bawdy & Soul

"...Wittgenstein, a minimalist, 75-minute, home-movie biography, is a sublime gift from the dying filmmaker, a miraculous little chamber movie..."

For the last few years, British film-director Derek Jarman (Caravaggio, Edward II) has been battling a crippling AIDS virus by going public in his art about his disease. He's published his angry, intense, personal journals; pushing for time, he's made a series of valiant movies that are, among other things, tough-minded philosophical dialogues with himself about his impending fate.

The Garden, released several years ago, ended with Jarman's imagining (sadly) his demise, a spirit united with the cosmos, floating above the verdant earth. Blue, his very recent film, is 75 minutes of one monochromatic image, a shade of blue, mirroring Jarman's loss of sight in real life: death from AIDS seems imminent.

Directly before Blue came Wittgenstein, which Jarman somehow pulled himself together to write and direct in 1992. It's a sublime gift from the dying filmmaker, a miraculous little chamber movie. Produced low-budget on a sound stage, using many of Jarman's intimate, acting friends (look for Orlando star Tilda Swinson, who has been in almost all Jarman movies), Wittgenstein is a minimalist, 75-minute, home-movie biography of the great logical positivist philosopher.

ELEGY: Clancy Chassay plays the young philosopher in Director Derek Jarman's miraculous film.

Wittgenstein, like Jarman, was London-based and homosexual. Far more important to Jarman, the philosopher died desperately frustrated, succumbing to prostate cancer. At 63, Wittgenstein believed he was at last doing his breakthrough work in philosophy. All earlier was a preface.

Who can doubt that Wittgenstein on his deathbed at the film's end, so pale and numbed, is Derek Jarman courageously looking at himself? A spirit standing by his corpse. But I said that Wittgenstein is miraculous: that's because the tone of the film is rarely self-pitying. In fact, Jarman's elegy is witty, sprightly, inventive, a consistently imaginative-and-entertaining string of sketches, piano interludes and blackouts.

Also, Wittgenstein is more than Jarman's onscreen shadow. As played nervously, neurotically, yet with enormous empathy by Karl Johnson, this Wittgenstein has his own twitchy, explosive flesh-and-blood integrity. It's incredibly interesting to watch Wittgenstein's famous love/hate relationship with philosophy. At times in his life, he decided to escape his metaphysical calling (and his teaching at haughty Cambridge) by instead becoming a "human being." He fought at the front in World War I; he attempted (disastrously) to be a humble grammar-school teacher. He lived in solitary self-exile in Norway and Ireland. He went to Stalin's Russia to volunteer as a manual laborer. He tried — with such guilt! — to have a sex life.

Most often, he put down his books and went to the movies. He loved westerns and musicals, Betty Hutton and Carmen Miranda. But nothing ultimately worked to keep his tortured mind free of philosophical worries. "He begins every morning in hope," a friend described Wittgenstein, "and he ends each evening in despair." So it was back to the blackboard and to the treatises, although he stubbornly refused to read Aristotle and, out of hand, dismissed Hegel. In person, he argued brusquely for decades with his philosopher mentor, Bertrand Russell, until they became estranged because of Russell's homophobia.

WITTGENSTEIN

Directed by: Derek Jarman
Written by: Jarman, Terry Eagleton and Kevin Butler
Playing at: Harvard Film Archive, Dec. 3-12

There are juicy scenes in Wittgenstein of the Bloomsbury Group: "Berty" Russell lounging about barefoot on his bed, economist John Maynard Keynes smooching with his male lover. But even neater are the interludes featuring Wittgenstein, the boy. Bespectacled actor Clancy Chassay is charming as the quizzical young Ludwig, and there's no more-enchanting scenes in Wittgenstein than those in which Ludwig argues philosophy with a green-bodied Martian dwarf. It's Sesame Street with delectable Wonderland dialogue: Alice vs. the Caterpillar, or the Cheshire Cat.

What don't we get in Wittgenstein? Although there are noble attempts here to explain some elementary Wittgensteinian concepts, the philosopher's infamously difficult thinking remains impenetrable to non-experts.

A quibble. Wittgenstein is among the finest films of 1993, a mini-masterwork from Derek Jarman, who so deserves an off-screen miracle. ❑

SHOWING ITS AGE

"...To celebrate its 20th birthday, Bromfield, Boston's longest-running, artist-operated gallery, is offering a retrospective and celebration..."

DOUG BELL: Francis, acrylic, oil and mixed media on wood, is by one of Bromfield's featured artists.

The good news this season has been the revitalization of Boston's traditional gallery row along Newbury Street. After the bloodletting of the past few years, which saw closings and retrenchment, dealers are guardedly optimistic. But running a successful gallery has always been a risky business. Even in the best of times, such as the high-flying 1980s, it has always been tough for emerging artists to break into the field. Back in 1973, a group of artists with studios in Boston's downtown jewelry district took matters into their own hands and started the cooperative, Bromfield Gallery, on what was then a wish and a prayer.

For the next two months, Boston's longest-running, artist-run gallery is offering a two-part retrospective and celebration. Current director Christina Lanzl has organized Beyond Dreams: 20 Years of the Bromfield Gallery in Boston through Dec. 30. "Part One: The Retrospective," will be followed by "Part Two: Current Members," which runs from Jan. 4 to Jan. 29. The historical component of the survey will travel to the Attleboro Museum in early winter upon completion of its current renovation and expansion.

This ambitious series of exhibitions focuses on the artists' ongoing struggle to exhibit their work. While this is an occasion for celebration and a time to dwell on past accomplishments, the challenge for contemporary artists is basically no different today than when the idea of having their own gallery was but a dream. Lanzl's concept of Beyond Dreams also implies that the more things change the more they remain the same. In the past few years the erosion of state-and-federal support for the arts has put arts organizations such as the Bromfield Gallery smack-dab where they were 20 years ago.

BROMFIELD GALLERY

BEYOND DREAMS: 20 Years of the Bromfield Gallery in Boston; Part One: "The Retrospective," through Dec. 30; "Current Members," Jan. 4-29
107 SOUTH ST.
451-3605

The two exhibitions clearly demonstrate why ventures such as these are so deserving of support. The retrospective offers rich evidence of past accomplishments while the much anticipated second half will provide tantalizing glimpses of the future.

Selecting from the many artists who have been involved with the gallery in the past 20 years was a tough job for the jurors. While commercial galleries represent the taste and vision of a single individual, Bromfield has evolved and changed with its voting membership over the years. The resulting exhibition is an eclectic mix of abstraction and realism with a representation of media from painting and sculpture to photography and works-on-paper.

After much tough deliberation, a five-person jury chose works by Doug Bell, Jerry Berndt, Polly Brown, Elli Crocker, Maryjean Viano Crowe, John Devaney, Gretchen Ewert, Mary Good, Robert Goss, Pier Gustafson, D.K. Hall, Jeff Hull, Paul Laffoley, Peter Plamondom, John Powell, Ron Rizzi, Jane Smaldone, Gail Smuda, Candace Walters and Tabitha Vevers.

While there is no Bromfield look or prevailing style, this is a list of artists of a uniformly high quality, from which any gallery would draw justifiable pride. Especially when one considers that many on this who's-who list of Boston artists had their first professional exposure through the artist-run gallery. Many are now represented by major commercial galleries and have a track record of museum exhibitions.

Over the years Bromfield has had its high and low points. There was a fire of "mysterious origin" that forced it out of its first of several locations. Most recently, it has had to endure the relocation of many other galleries from the South Street area due to panic over the impending disruption of the Big Dig.

But you won't have trouble spotting its building at 107 South St., which has been turned into the giant, conceptual-art Christmas Tree by lighting-artist John Powell. From now through the New Year, just enjoy. Let Bromfield and Powell light up your life. Peace. ❑

"...The Grandes Marques companies responsible for cultivating champagne's global image have lost their controlling position to no-name brands..."

Champagne evokes strong emotions. Partisans adore it so fervently they will pop bottles open on the flimsiest pretext, while detractors stereotype it as a beverage reserved for showoffs and parasites. On one point a consensus has formed: champagne comprises its own category, essentially different than wine.

TOIL AND TROUBLE: Under threat from lesser-quality newcomers, big-name champagnes, adhering to time-honored production methods, taste better than ever.

This is a misconception. Champagne may originate in a particular area of northern France, its bubbles produced according to exacting standards, but its nature is first and foremost that of a wine: a reflection of climate and soil. In fact, it is the single wine name whose authentic quality over the years has entitled it to the highest consumer trust. Until recently.

Monumental changes have transformed champagne since 1990. For decades a few-dozen prestigious companies had guided the district's fortunes. The significant capital investment these famous brand names, or Grandes Marques, made helped perfect the production process and establish the region's quality reputation. Throughout the world, Moet et Chandon, Mumm, Taittinger and the rest, each promoting its own house style, created a devoted following. Few of the companies, however, controlled sufficient vineyard acreage to supply production requirements, relying instead on arrangements to buy grapes from numerous small growers.

Champagne's prosperity depended on the mutual interests shared among landowners and the companies that made and marketed the wine. Although power ultimately remained with the mercantile aristocracy, everyone benefited. The relationship between the groups formalized in 1959 in a general contract, renewable annually, encouraged growers to plant additional vines, assured them a stable price, and allocated supplies according to each company's requirements.

This system broke down in 1990. Growers felt they were not achieving a satisfactory return. In asserting independence from the Grandes Marques, they sought to reverse the area's long-standing power relationships. The result, according to Bollinger's Christian Bizot, has been an "erosion of the market." Every grape buyer now negotiates separately with the growers, rather than working from industrywide regulated price formulas. The companies responsible for cultivating champagne's global image have consequently lost their controlling position.

New lower-priced champagnes, without ongoing reputations to uphold, have arisen and seized market share. These so-called generic champagnes avoid high promotional expenses and allegedly take numerous short cuts instead of pursuing the costly quality-enhancement measures the Grandes Marques traditionally follow. The champagne houses fear that, as a result, consumers will grow confused about what champagne is supposed to be and that faith in its excellence will diminish.

Are these concerns justified? Why, after all, should consumers pay a premium for the well-known names rather than switch to the no-name competitors? What actually distinguishes them? To clarify these issues, the Association of Grandes Marques has enacted a set of internal rules to govern their production practices. The intent is to specify what constitutes a Grande Marque and to publicize why alternatives are no bargain.

The central points involve: buying grapes from superior vineyards; assuming full responsibility for making the wine rather than simply appending a label to finished bottles; blending in specified quantities of reserve wines that lend character; and practicing lengthier aging regimes than required by law. All of these measures (better raw materials, higher quality control, financing the stocks until maturity) inevitably increase the price, but should also make a finer wine.

As always, the proof is in the bottle. In my experience, many Grandes Marques are performing better now than ever. An opportunity to enjoy some Pol Roger Brut N.V. last week halted conversation in its tracks. The wine's structure, stylistic precision and wave of overlapping flavors invited comment and applause. Champagne aficionados, who have always rewarded quality, should take note not to compromise now with overnight labels. Their best guarantee remains a company with a reputation to defend. As Philippe Court of Taittinger recently told me with pride, "We don't know how to make the inferior wines. We don't have the technology for it." ❑

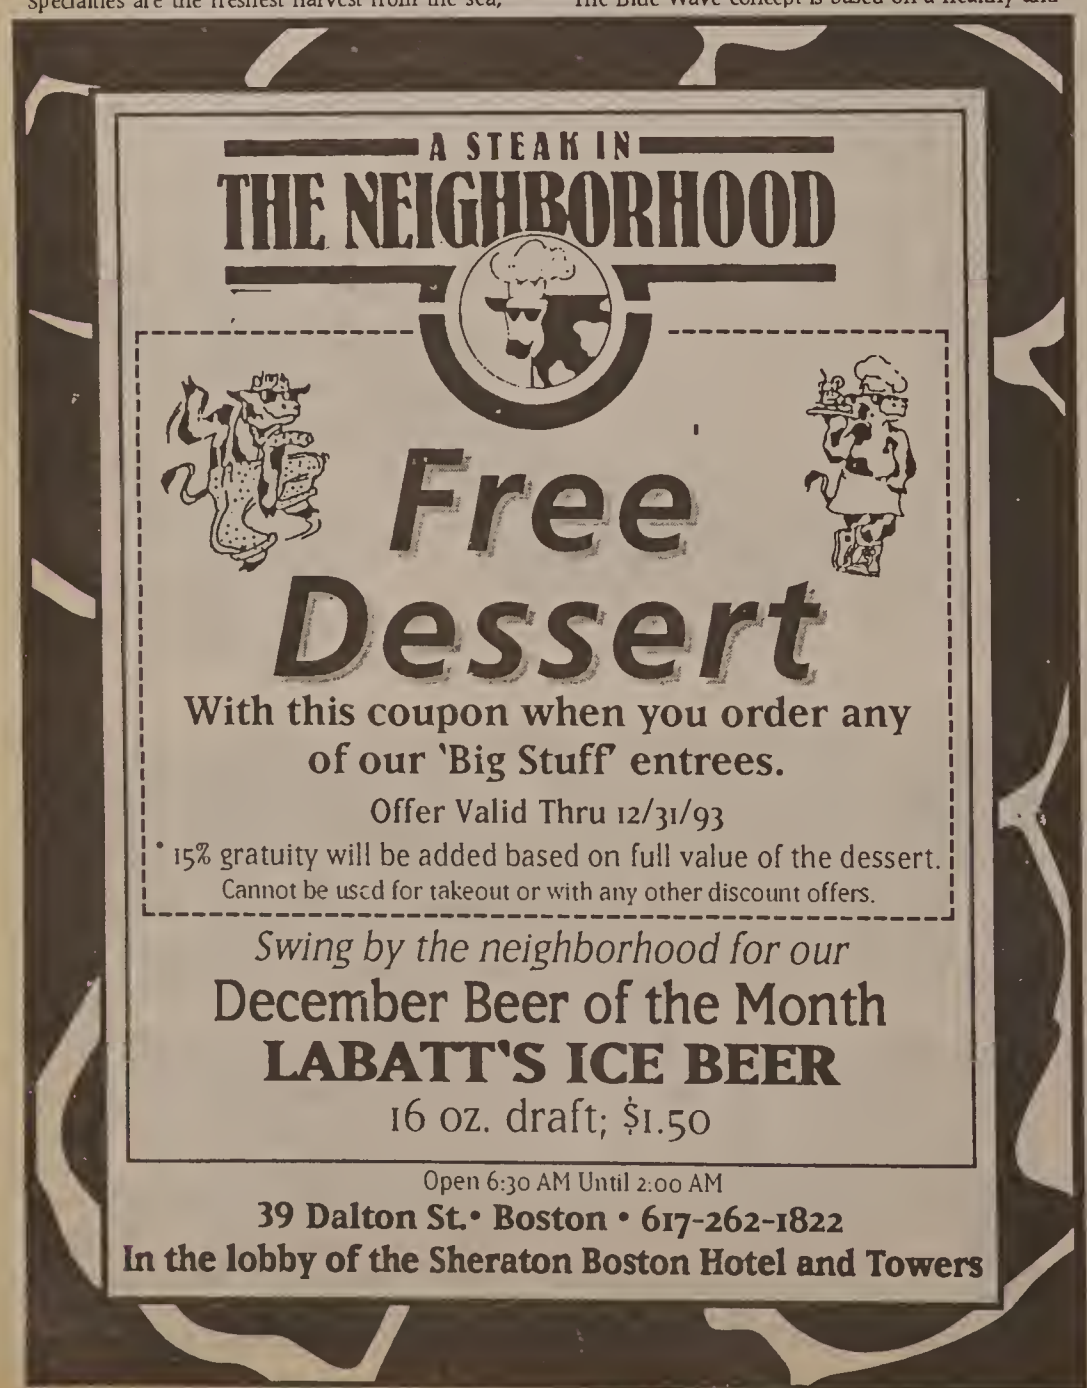
323 Hanover St., North End, Boston, 523-8567.
215 Elm St., Davis Square, Somerville, 623-0375.
261 Northern Ave., Boston's Fish District, 338-3093, 441 Harvard St., Brookline 734-5696.
This original 20-year-old Sicilian-style seafood & pasta restaurant is best known for its specialty-classic calamari. The menu is based on traditional Sicilian recipes—synonymous with healthy eating. "For those of us who suffer from a clear addiction to shellfish and squid, the existence of the Daily Catch has been a source of comfort for many years," Robert Levey, The Boston Globe, December 1989.

Davio's
269 Newbury St., 262-4810. Royal Sonesta Hotel, 5 Cambridge Parkway, Cambridge, 661-4810
202 Washington Street, Brookline Village, 738-4810.
Davio's in Boston captures the flavor of Newbury Street. Experience the finest in Northern Italian dining in a cozy, friendly setting where uniquely prepared homemade pasta, veal and seafood dishes are specialties. The Brookline location is in the heart of quaint Brookline Village, and the Cambridge restaurant overlooks the Charles River. Wherever you are in the Boston area, one of Davio's three distinctive restaurants is only minutes away.

Dick's Last Resort
55 Huntington Ave., Boston, 267-8080.
Major credit cards accepted – Dick loves cash.
A restaurant (of sorts), Dick's has the kind of food that is not particularly fashionable and definitely not spa cuisine–buckets of messy ribs, chicken, catfish, shrimp, lobster and crab legs, served on butcher paper. There are also 74 kinds of beer for the novice or serious sudsman. Dick's has obnoxious live classic rock, rhythm & blues and Dixieland jazz seven nights a week, no cover charge, no dress code and certainly no class. On Sunday, Dick got religion and hired some gospel singers for a surprisingly good brunch from 10am to 3pm. A buffet full of goodies such as salads, hot entrées, omelet station, waffles, desserts and make-your-own sundae station. Dick's Last Resort is billed as "The shame of Boston's Back Bay" and an embarrassment to any neighborhood. Dick says, "Although the food is good and there's plenty of it, places with great food are a dime a dozen." It's the restaurant's style (or lack of it), loud music, wisecracking service people, bullyish doormen, and insulting promotional attitudes that raise eyebrows. Open Monday-Saturday from 11 a.m.-2 a.m., 10 a.m.-2 a.m. Sunday. Free parking after 5 p.m.

Dolce Vita
237 Hanover St., Boston, 720-0422.
Located in the heart of the North End-come and experience the hustle and bustle of little Italy. Specializing in Northern and Southern Italian cuisine, with lots of seafood. Special dishes include seafood Alexander, gnocchi, quattro-fromaggi, veal Grand Marnier, and chicken Sicilian. Open seven days from 11 a.m. to 11 p.m.



The Fishery
718 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge. 868-8800.
Major credit cards accepted.
Dock yourself at The Fishery's hand-crafted, boat-shaped raw bar or enjoy dinner in its casual, nautical dining room. The Fishery's own pan-fried crab cakes rival Maryland's best. "Delicious pan-fried crab cakes." The Boston Herald.. The Boston Phoenix calls The Fishery "a local gem," and The Fishery Calamari "irresistibly addictive." The Fishery is proud to serve only the freshest, quality seafood. Specialties include: sour cream and mustard catfish, lemongrass mussels, southwestern shrimp, and a variety of grilled seafood. Open Monday-Friday from 11:30 a.m. to 10:30 p.m, and 12 p.m. to 10:30 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

The Fish Pier
667 East Broadway, South Boston, 269-2111.
The largest selection of fresh, fried, baked, and broiled seafood and the friendliest service in South Boston characterize the Fish Pier restaurant. The menu also includes a multitude of chicken dishes, prime and BBQ ribs, sandwiches, salads, appetizers, chowders, and other hearty American fare. The ample portions of sea scallops, fresh fish, prime rib, and other house specialties come at a price that will please your accountant. (The Boston Globe's Cheap Eats reviewers rave about the Fish Pier). Mention the Improper Bostonian and enjoy a free appetizer with your dinner! Come to South Boston's neighborhood mecca for fresh seafood or call up for delivery anywhere in Boston. Open for lunch and dinner: Monday and Tuesday 10:30 a.m.-9 p.m.; Wednesday-Saturday 10: 30 a.m.-10 p.m.; Sunday 12-9 p.m.

Gandhi Restaurant
704 Massachusetts Avenue, Cambridge, 491-1104.
Major credit cards accepted.
Enjoy a fresh and healthy, light and spicy menu that offers a plenitude of vegetable, seafood, chicken and lamb entrees. For vegi lovers-baingen bartha, eggplant cooked with peas and tomatoes, and bhindi bhuna, fresh okra roasted with onion, ginger and garlic are exotic treats. Gandhi offers tender chicken and lamb dishes cooked in curry sauces or with vegetables. Shrimp Nargassi, shrimp cooked with spinach, and fish vindaloo, spicy fresh curry mix with potato, are other light and healthy alternatives. All dishes may be ordered for take-out anytime and will receive a 10% discount. Open 7 days a week, lunch 12-3 p.m., dinner 3-11 p.m. Call for delivery 577-0000.

Geoffrey's Café - Bar
651 Boylston St., Boston, 437-6400.
578 Tremont St., Boston, 266-1122.
With two convenient locations, in the heart of the Back Bay and in the South End Geoffrey's Cafe - Bar has become a favorite for many of the locals. Geoffrey's serves breakfast, brunch, lunch, dinner and decadent desserts 7 days a week. Geoffrey's prides itself with serving the healthiest portions of the freshest food at extremely reasonable prices and was the Improper Bostonian's winner for "Best Waitress" and "Best Brunch." Stop by one of their two locations today. Open Monday-Thursday 7:30

Movable Feasts/ By R.E. Brunson

BRAVO, ENZO'S

"... In a nutshell, the food was great, the service was excellent and the ambiance, magical..."

Enzo's Ristorante d'Italia sits on Harvard Street in the Coolidge Corner neighborhood of Brookline. The owner, Enzo Raggiani, oversees the restaurant and brings his own touch to its operation; he can be found seating guests, checking on preparation in the kitchen, or chatting with the regular customers. The dishes on the menu come from the many regions of Italy and show influences from the country's northern neighbors, Switzerland and France. The Friday evening after Thanksgiving, our party was tired of turkey and anxious for a meal with origins outside of the continental United States. The restaurant looks plain on the outside, but inside, the dining room is skillfully painted. On the right, the large stones of an ancient building cover the wall, and on the left, a painted railing borders a vista of Italian countryside. We felt as if we were dining on a terrace.

What followed was a wonderful time, one in which all the elements that make up a total dining experience came together. In a nutshell, the food was great, the service was excellent and the ambiance, magical.

It all started with the Aperol, an Italian aperitif similar to Campari. It appeared at the table and seduced us, mixed with grapefruit and orange juice, a touch of grenadine and topped with slices of citrus fruits and a strawberry. With such a summery look and flavor, we were transported (remember that famous madeleine?) from bleak Boston to the sunny hills of Italy. All around us were the signs, even the bird painted on the wall seemed to break into song. Thankfully, Ed, our waiter, was there to guide us, making several recommendations that were winning. The service was attentive but not intrusive, and before we could even look up, our needs were taken care of.

Food, yes, there was food. And it began, as most meals do, with bread. The bread was a foccacia, homemade; it was light and chewy and soaked with rosemary olive oil. Our group also used it to soak up the delicious sauces that surrounded most of the food.

And then there were the appetizers, of which we ordered several. The first was a special of grilled polenta with porcini mushrooms. I can see it now, a thin strip of polenta marked by the heat of the grill and covered with chopped porcini mushrooms. The porcini flavor was intense in the sauce; we suspected that a reduction of the cooking liquid supplied the flavor. We loved it. In fact, most of the sauces we sampled had intensified flavors. It all comes back to me now. The second appetizer we ordered was the antipasto Enzo. The plate arrived in a portion for two, and so spectacular in appearance was it — with its garnish of radicchio and grilled endive — that initially we didn't want to touch it. Among the antipasti, featured items included imported prosciutto over cantaloupe, roasted peppers and buffalo mozzarella covered with olive oil and pesto sauce. For an unusual touch, we tried smoked salmon over sliced fennel and fresh chicken-liver paté on crostini. Not a scrap remained on our plate. And as far as the next appetizer is concerned, the gamberi Alexandra, it was as wonderful as the rest. Enough said.

So what else did we have?, you may ask. Well, appetizers alone have never been enough to satisfy our party, so it was on to the big plates and larger portions of the entrees. (If you are already filled by the appetizers, skip ahead to the desserts.)

The first entree was a special called Marco Polo. It contained tender bay scallops and jumbo shrimp (a little overdone) in a flavorful white-wine sauce with red peppers and parsley. Molded rice with parsley filled the center of the plate. The dish was very pleasing, both to the taste buds and to the eye. Our pasta choice was the seafood raviolis. The pasta had the velvety touch of fresh, homemade pasta, and the seafood filling went well with the light tomato sauce. It was garnished with open clams. And the most unusual dish was the pollo alla contadina, a chicken breast pounded to the thickness of a tortilla, covered in a dark, spicy tomato sauce, and filled with red-and-yellow peppers and spicy sausage. Sliced string beans and onions arranged in a radicchio leaf garnished the side of the plate. My memory gets better (and salivation starts) with the revisiting of every bite. And for your information, we discovered that the kitchen is happy to accommodate special requests.

Now, as far as dessert is concerned, we have a pact. Even if a member of our party has no desire for dessert, they still have to order one so that we can sample it. Two of our favorites were the zabaglione and the tiramisu. The zabaglione came in a goblet; was warm, light and foamy (from the whipped egg yolks); and had a sharp bite that came from the marsala wine. Pieces of tart kiwi fruit were mixed in. This dessert was a winner.

The tiramisu had the usual components, ladyfingers, cocoa and espresso, but with the addition of zabaglione to the mascarpone cheese, the filling became light as a cloud. It disappeared as soon as it touched our tongues.

After finishing our desserts, we discovered that we had lingered past the closing time. And if they hadn't bid us good night, we might never have left. ❑

Trattoria Pulcinelli will open next week in the old Chez Nous spot on 147 Huron Ave. in Cambridge. It will feature moderately priced Italian food and a chef from Italy. Best of luck. A Thanksgiving thank you to Chef Christopher Moos and the staff at the Cafe Suisse in the Swissôtel. Our party of nine had a wonderful time and was treated royally at the Thanksgiving Day luncheon. Charlotte Bogardus is making a move to the marketing department at the Coffee Connection. Look for Anago Bistro to be featured in the "Best New Restaurant" article in the January edition of Bon Appetit. St. Cloud on Tremont Street in the South End is starting a late-night dessert buffet on Friday and Saturday nights from 11 p.m. to 1 a.m. Who says there aren't any places to go for late-night food and fun?

More Juicy Details

Union Square Bistro in Somerville is offering what it calls "personalized preparation" in both the cafe downstairs and in the restaurant. Diners can build their own meals with items from the menu. If you don't like that broccoli, away it goes. Congratulations to Community Servings on the success of its "Pie in the Sky" fund-raiser. In it, restaurants donated pies whose profits went to furnishing meals for homebound AIDS patients and their families. Community Servings now needs 200 people for its next project, which is to coordinate holiday baskets that will be delivered on Christmas Day to homebound families. For info or to volunteer, call Robbie at 287-1605. Buonicconti's restaurant in Cambridge has a new grazing menu, with appetizers such as telephone-wire risotto, roasted rounds of risotto filled with fontina cheese and grilled focaccia with goat cheese. They are inexpensive and are also served at the bar. ❑

BREWERIES

138 Portland St., Boston, 523-8383.
"Let no man thirst for lack of real ale," is the motto at this micro-brewery and restaurant featuring glass walls so thirsty patrons can longingly observe the brewing process. The decor consists of copper tables, pipes and beer tanks. Approximately 10 English ales are served on tap as well as Boston Burton Ale served frosty cold in the bottle. Close proximity to the Boston Garden translates to before and after game crowds. Live reggae and calypso every Friday and Saturday night 9:30 p.m. to 1 a.m. Brewery tours are free, but sorry, this isn't the Molson factory. No samples. $3 cover, and if you have dinner here, cover is waived.

DANCING

AVENUE C
5 Boylston Place, Boston, 423-3832.
A chichi dance club located in the Theatre District across from the Common. Inside you'll find a mix of young professionals who arrive to meet, mix, mate, or dance up a storm. Cover charge increases after 10 p.m., so arrive early. No jeans or collarless shirts. Progressive music Friday and Saturday nights. Piano rooms.

EUROPA INTERNATIONAL BAR & CLUB
51 Stuart St. in Boston's theatre district, 482-6440.
If you're looking for a Friday night party, come dance for free at Europa, but don't forget your blue Improper Bostonian Europa/Roxy coupon from the October 27 and November 10 issues. Fridays are Club Classics Nights with DJ Tony Z, a buffet by Jacob Wirth from 8:30-10 p.m., and live performances in the lounge and piano bar, 8 p.m.-2 a.m. Saturdays and Wednesdays are International Night, 10:30 p.m.-2 a.m. Sundays: Brazilian Night, 9:30 p.m.-2a.m. Mondays: Ebony Night Out, 10 p.m.-2 a.m. Thursdays: Asian Night, 11 p.m.-2 a.m. Call for live music info. Proper attire required.

ROXY
279 Tremont St. in the Tremont House, 227-7699.
Come dance and mingle in Boston's most elegant nightclub. FREE ADMISSION to the Roxy on Saturday nights with the blue Roxy/Europa pass from the Improper Bostonian's October 27 and November 10 issues.

About Last Night. . . Lauren Dare AKA The Last Call Lady

T.G.I. FLED

"...Things were looking grim. I was trapped at the bar at Friday's with men who sold probes to proctologists. What did I do to deserve this?..."

You want to know who goes to T.G.I. Friday's? (Thank God It's Friday's. Hah.) Well, I'll tell you. Tourists and airline stewardesses. Sure, there's a smattering of obnoxious suburbanites with kids having birthdays who come for the "cute" uniforms and the raucous hurrah that accompanies every birthday cake; there are also a few random Bostonians who have dazedly stumbled in for a drink before passing on to other venues. But for the most part, it's out-of-towners and air hostesses. And I'll tell you why. You can go to a Friday's in any part of the country and expect and receive the same mediocrity in fare and atmosphere. Now that's something to be proud of. All across the nation, Friday's is the standard-bearer of the bland.

For the unadventurous or the slowwitted, it's perfect. Why try something daring and different when you can slouch into Friday's and know exactly what you are getting yourself into? For the lonely businessman or airport jetsam, Friday's on Newbury Street offers the unique qualities of being close to all the major hotels and the company of kindred souls also drowning in their drinks.

I can understand the comfort of the familiar. I can understand that Friday's is right in the heart of the Back Bay, making it easily accessible, and I can even understand (although only barely) thinking that the faux -saloon decor and the wait staff wearing those goober buttons that say things such as "Kiss me — I'm a waiter" are charming. But I cannot even begin to comprehend waiting interminably in line to get into someplace that's about as exciting as Kmart on a red-dot day. I mean, people are piling up in line out front, on a perfectly good weekend night. "Huh, ayuh, goin' to Friday's, it's pissa!"

Now Boston may not compare to New York when it comes to nightlife options. But please! Surely you can do better than this!

I know that I am undoubtedly upsetting some die-hard Friday's fans right now. To its credit, Friday's does have a couple of good points, which I will list immediately, in the interest of peace: 1) They make the best Texas tea in town and 2) The wait staff does tend to be generally helpful (and friendly to the point of nausea).

Despite these accolades on Friday's behalf, the only way I personally can tolerate the place is with an I.V. solution of that Texas tea tapped directly into a main vein. This tends to dull my sensibilities sufficiently enough that I can even create the semblance of a good time. I admit, I would be a liar if I said that I have never had a fun evening at Friday's; but the recollection is so dim, I find it hard to remember exactly what took place. I do believe that I started making eyes at one of the businessmen who was making moves on one of the stewardesses, and things went downhill from there.

On the other side of me were some guys from Waltham who thought that Friday's was the end-all and be-all of Boston bars. I remember thinking "T.G.I.F." (Thank God I Fled from the suburbs) as I stumbled into that adds-so-much-to-the-atmosphere phone booth Friday's has in the middle of the restaurant, whereupon I promptly got locked in.

After trying vainly to make my escape, I resigned myself to my fate and called everyone I knew who lives more than 100 miles away, collect. I couldn't believe that more of my "friends" weren't happier to hear from a slightly intoxicated me at 1:30 in the morning.

When some kind soul finally let me out of my prison and I returned to the bar, the Walthamites had departed, leaving me in the company of leering medical-equipment salesmen who were staying at the Lenox Hotel. Things were looking grim. I was trapped at the bar at Friday's with men who sold probes to proctologists. What did I do to deserve this? All I could think was "Forget about Friday; give me Monday, any day of the week.. ❑

THE IRISH EMBASSY PUB
234 Friend Street,Boston, at the Boston Garden, 742-6618.
Do you remember The Irish Embassy Pub in Falmouth? Of course you do! Now we are also at The Boston Garden. Come down and enjoy a great crowd in a fun, casual atmosphere. Sundays there are acoustic jams in the afternoon and a D.J. at night. Monday nights come down and beat the winter blues with our blues jam. Tuesdays: Eoin Woods. Wednesdays: Best original music. Thursdays: College cover bands. Fridays: Alternative music. Saturdays: Classic hits.

THE KELLS
161 Brighton Ave., Allston, 782-9082.
The popular Irish pub The Kells prides itself on featuring "the best in live bands." Everything from the cutting edge of rock to original Irish folk music. Live entertainment is featured 7 nights a week, and Irish/American folk music can be heard on Monday, Tuesday, Friday, and Saturday. For those important sports events, check out the TV at The Kells, the biggest screen in Boston! Students are welcomed to visit. Open 7 nights until 2:00 a.m.

KINVARA PUB
34 Harvard Ave., Allston, 783-9400.
If you are looking for a lively pub with an Irish flavor, the Kinvara Pub is the place to be. The pub features some of Boston's hottest acts where dancing is the norm. Live bands Wednesday thru Sunday. Sunday night: DJ Tom. Feast your eyes on our sumptuous dinner specials and appetizers, served until midnight. There is a wide assortment of bottled and draft beer, but the Guinness shouldn't be missed. Open 7 days a week until 2 a.m., with ample parking in rear. Casual dress.

O'LEARY'S
1010 Beacon Street, Brookline, 734-0049.
If the vast selection of both tap and bottled beers here isn't enough to tempt you, let the warm look and feel of a traditional Irish pub lure you in. The crowd is fun-loving, the atmosphere comfortable and dress is casual. Always a guaranteed good time. Live Music.

MR. DOOLEY'S BOSTON TAVERN
77 Broad Street, Boston, 338-9171 or 338-5656.
Major credit cards accepted. Drop in for a pint of stout and soak up the atmosphere at one of the most authentic Irish taverns in the city. Live music six nights a week, imported beers on tap. A traditional breakfast is served on Sunday from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. The kitchen is open daily. Open 11:30 a.m. to 2 a.m.

XMAS IS HEAR

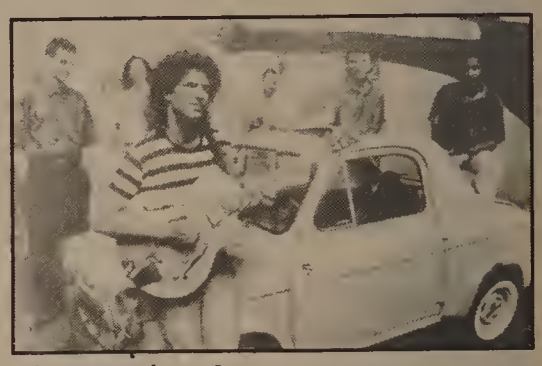
Where did December come from so suddenly? Guess I was too busy listening to music. But at least I have ideas on what to buy the music fan on your holiday gift list.

The most obvious (and expensive) gift is a boxed set, and record companies have made sure there's a lot from which to choose. You can get everything the Police ever recorded (including rough, early singles) on Message in a Box, or dig into the magic of soulman Otis Redding on a new, definitive boxed set that includes an all-live CD for the effect of one concert. Both of those are four-CD sets, but boxes range from all of Led Zeppelin's albums on 10 discs to great two-CD packs that summarize the work of Dr. John, Los Lobos and John Coltrane.

Bjork



However, my favorite boxes are by King Crimson and Ella Fitzgerald. The casual fan of '70s progressive rock might fare better with The Return of the Manticore, the four-CD set of Emerson, Lake & Palmer. But prog-rock fans who truly want an intense venture should tap into Crimson's The Great Deceiver, a live four-CD chunk of shows from 1973-'74 — a cross between heavy metal and free-form jazz. Ella Fitzgerald's three-CD First Lady of Song is a testament to her peerless vocal gift, featuring many live rarities (from a duet with Louis Armstrong to usual favorites such as "Summertime").

Col. Bruce Hampton and the Aquarium Rescue Unit

The ultimate gift for the metal fan is possibly Metallica's *Live Sh*t: Binge and Purge*, which boasts three CDs and two videotapes. But you can't find a more dynamic, in-your-face band than veteran AC/DC in concert-video Live at Donington. A prize for country-folk fans might be the video version of Nanci Griffith's Other Voices, Other Rooms, a two-night Texas concert with Emmylou Harris, Iris DeMent, Jerry Jeff Walker, Odetta, Jimmie Dale Gilmore and others. And for rap fans, consider videos by Arrested Development (whose Eyes as Hard as a Million Tombstones mixes videos with concert-and-interview footage) and Public Enemy, whose The Enemy Strikes Live is a concert package that also includes controversial videos such as "By the Time I Get to Arizona."

Aimee Mann

As for individual CDs, you're right to be concerned that someone might already have the new Pearl Jam. But there are lots of others. Imagine a whimsical cross between Chrissie Hynde and Neil Young's Crazy Horse and you've got Bettie Serveert's Palomine. While Urge Overkill's punk-pop Saturation rocks, you can stretch soul-rock horizons beyond Prince with Terence Trent D'Arby's Symphony or Damn. Country-rock fans might taste Swinging Steaks' Southside of the Sky, while eclectic types could dive into Col. Bruce Hampton & the Aquarium Rescue Unit's psycho-bluegrass fusion on Mirrors of Embarrassment. You're not likely to find a better '60s-influenced pop record than Aimee Mann's Whatever, and Bjork's Debut is an innovative mix of atmospherics and dance beats.

The Pat Metheny Group

Among jazz CDs, cast any eye to Joe Henderson's So Near, So Far (Musings for Miles) — a Davis tribute with John Scofield, Dave Holland and Al Foster — or the first two albums from new tenor-sax sensation Joshua Redman (the newer Wish with Pat Metheny). And the Metheny Group's live The Road to You may be its best yet. Blues fans should dig deep-soul singer Mighty Sam McClain's Give It Up to Love. For a left-field choice, consider the sophisticated new tango sounds of Astor Piazolla on a new CD rerelease of Tango: Zero Hour; it's hard to find music more gripping and passionate.

Contemporary-folk fans should zero in on the latest from two local veterans. Bill Morrissey's creaky, poignant wit is intact on Night Train, while Patty Larkin's sublime Angels Running gives those other female singer-songwriters a run for their money.

On the ticket front, give a trip to the Harvard Winter Folk Festival (including local stars Greg Greenway and Ellis Paul, and Indiana's Carrie Newcomer) at Somerville Theater Feb. 26. It should be a great concert that's on sale now. ❑

SECOND FIDDLE

"...On the alleged 350th anniversary of composer Marc-Antoine Charpentier's birth, we mainly know what his jealous, career-long arch-rival Lully poison-penned about him..."

Some people are celebrating the 350th anniversary of Marc-Antoine Charpentier's birth. Some people are not. The date is uncertain. The most fascinating aspect of Charpentier's biography is the complete lack of detail, as he was thwarted at every turn by a vicious rival. Like a fossil, the imprint of Charpentier's life is recorded only in negative, impressed upon history through the maneuvers of those who sought to destroy his career and stifle his music. In this (projected) anniversary year, it's worth a look at Charpentier's life, and recordings new and old of his music, which with its ravishing melodies and bizarre harmonies, still preserves the clearest portrait of its elusive composer.

The young Charpentier — whomever he may have been — spent three years in Italy (although we don't know which years), working with Carissimi, master of Roman vocal music. Though Charpentier's ear for a lilting melody may have been French, his cunning use of choirs set against one another and his daring harmonies were largely Italian. An Erato release (45822-2) earlier this year provides several good examples of this: In the vigorous, little oratorio about the deaths of Saul and Jonathan, for example, choral battle rages in the background as Saul bellows ineffectual orders and prepares for his suicide; in another piece, unfortunately fragmentary, heaven resounds as Satan's armies clash stridently and harmonically with the Archangel Michael's.

Charpentier's life, after he returned from Italy, is a complete blank for some years. We know intimate details, however, of the movements of his arch-rival Lully (b. 11/28/1632), who came from Italy as a circus boy, quickly drew attention (by posing nude in the King's cousin's garden) and became an intimate of Louis XIV.

Charpentier's bold innovations went unnoticed, while Lully's rather dull, if danceable, court music drew the attention of press and peer alike. Lully collaborated with the comic-playwright Moliere, producing some passable sit-com music for lyric interludes. When Lully and Moliere fell out, Charpentier brilliantly filled Lully's post.

It was at this point that the vicious Lully began maneuvering. He convinced the king to issue an edict putting him in charge of all operatic endeavors in France. No one could sing in public without Lully's express permission. There was opposition. One of his opponents was paid off; another fled to England, where his valet received a fee to cut his throat.

Charpentier and Moliere were hard-hit by Lully's brutal edicts. Charpentier had to keep revising his scores as Lully demanded he use ever smaller orchestras. In the middle of a production of Le Malade Imaginaire — (The Hypochondriac, Harmonia Mundi 901336) — Moliere collapsed and quickly died (he wasn't faking it). Lully grabbed their theater, where, amid royal applause, he began to stage his interminable opera monopoly.

Because of Lully, Charpentier's work was largely confined to writing church music, so he made his church music as operatic and emotional as possible. His sets of Tenebrae responsories — florid images of the destruction of cities and the desecration of temples — provide a good example (e.g. Lecons de Tenebre, Virgin 59295, released earlier this year), although perhaps his most striking pieces are his dramatic oratorios; try, for example, William Christie's recording of Cecilia, Virgin, and Martyr, with its angelic arias, its choked, final death scene, and its howling choral lament (HM 90066).

By producing work for various churches, Charpentier eluded Lully's vicious machinations. Lully, meanwhile, was writing pompous and much-applauded music, living a scandalously bisexual lifestyle, and working on eliminating rivals. When a soprano confided that she was pregnant and would be unable to sing, he scowled, backed up a few paces, and kicked her solidly in the stomach. After the miscarriage, the opera's run continued quite successfully.

Several of Lully's friends were exiled, and others burned at the stake, but Lully knew enough about the chief of police's son — who defaced crucifixes and tortured whores — that he himself was hardly ever implicated in their crimes.

There had been an attempt to poison Lully's snuff, which had failed miserably. His final fate was fitting: he assembled one of the largest choirs and orchestras France had ever seen, to honor the king in a massive Te Deum, which he conducted by banging a pole on the ground. During the performance, he hit his foot with the pole, contracted gangrene and died.

Now was Charpentier's chance. The operatic monopoly was over. He produced two lyric tragedies, both of them masterpieces of frustration: David et Jonathas (Erato 45162-2) and Medee (HM 901139.41).

A few enlightened critics saw in Charpentier a new and vital fusion of the French and Italian styles. But most people complained that his music wasn't enough like Lully's. His opera flopped.

He died, we think, in 1704.

Let others celebrate the anniversaries of Monteverdi, Byrd and Grieg. We'd like to tip our hats to poor, forgotten Charpentier.

Whoever he was. ❑

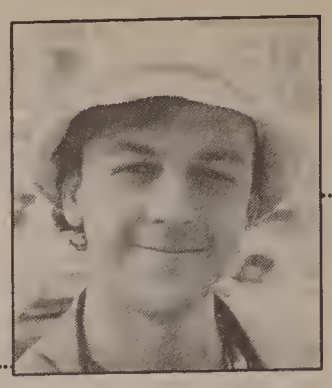
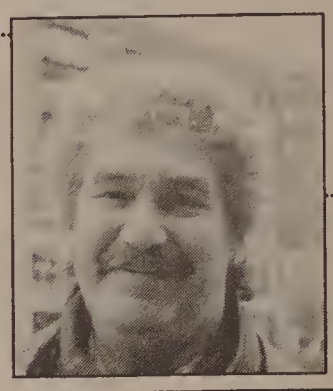
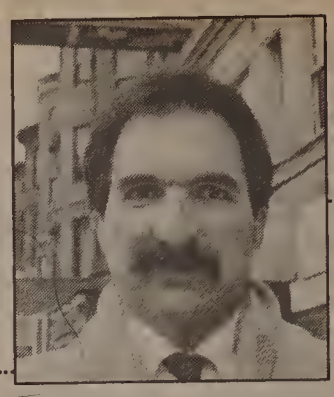
BY KIMBERLY CAVINESS AND MEGAN GILMARTIN



If Bill & Hillary Clinton were coming for dinner, what would you cook?

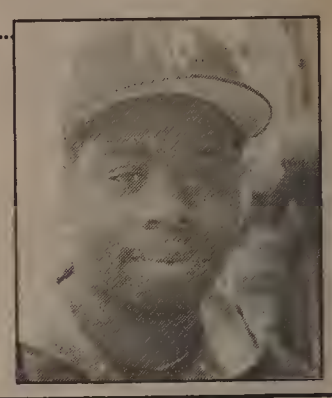


Connie, 49, Boston
"Coquille St. Jacques, a fettuccine course, tenderloin with béarnaise, caesar salad, creamed spinach ... And Grand Marnier soufflé."



Regina, 29, Lynn
"I wouldn't open the door."

Adam, 21, Newburyport
"Spaghetti — it's the only thing I know how to cook."



Donald, 59, Boston
"Broccoli-cheese soup, shrimp scampi and Charlotte Russe."

Sheldon, 30-50, Canton
"I'd order a large cheese pizza, with onions, peppers — well, I like peppers. My wife likes mushrooms. We'd order whatever kind they like."

Spooky, 21, Lynn
"I eat out — all day, every day. So Bill, you, me and the First Lady are going out."

Brown's Christmas Tree. Both films will be showing on Tues., Dec. 14, in a holiday double feature at 7:30 p.m. Admission is free, and there'll be free popcorn and Christmas cookies, too.

MUSEUM OF FINE ARTS
465 Huntington Ave., Boston
267-9300 x300
Most people don't think of this place as a place to see movies, but most people think Chateau Briand is a wine. In addition to a world-premiere movie, Out of Sight, about the real-life world of a 34-year-old cowgirl (Dec. 11 at 2:30), there is a new African film festival running throughout the month of December. Most tickets are $6.50, $5.50 for Friends of Film and MFA members, students and senior citizens. Call for details.

DEC. 8- DEC 21, 1993

GENERAL FORECAST:

These are the times that try men's patience because basically, nothing's happening. That's right, folks,—what we mainly get this week are lunar aspects that might divert us from our daily grind and protect us on the bumpy road to the mall. How to get around the horrific holiday traffic jams? Light a Hanukkah candle on Tuesday and pray for patience. Or courage (on Wednesday) to cut across those long lines of cars. Love (and its candle) comes by the grace of the Sagittarius new moon on Monday, which is exactly at 4:27 a.m. If you want a thrilling, possibly chilling romantic background for your lovefest, take your intended to the mountains for the Geminid meteor shower. The only planetary aspect of any interest is a Mars sextile to Saturn Monday afternoon that should foster better business, more efficient government and smoother relationships with all men, young and old. There's a military connotation, but it'll be in support of a "good war." Ha! Bah, humbug! My new-moon wish is for a better space technology and a higher purpose. Because Mars is in idealistic Sag and Saturn is at the tail end of scientific Uranus, and won't come back for another 30 years, it could happen! Isn't patience the key to the heavens?

ARIES (MARCH 20—APRIL 19)

Constructive step-by-step progress, particularly for those born close to the Taurus cusp. Out of country, out of state, formerly out of mind?—these are the sort of folks who can help you realize your current ambition. When your Mars ruler aligns with respectable, responsible Saturn on Monday, material success on some plane is there for the taking. The Sag new moon favors foreign travel and research; if you want to get out of town soon, focus on a suitable direction.

TAURUS (APRIL 20—MAY 20)

Intense emotional vulnerability Friday night/Saturday morning, so you might want to play it relatively safe and stick to the sadists you know, rather than seek out new forms of torture. Save that experience for Saturday night/Sunday morning, when the Sag moon puts you in a more playful mood. Bond around brunchtime with the woman of your dreams (Mom?) and go buy goodies while one of you is in a generous mood. The new moon falls in your eighth house of other people's money. Surprised?

GEMINI (MAY 21—JUNE 20)

Getting married? This is not a bad time to tie the knot, particularly if yours is a fiery relationship. And who among you (i.e., which Twin) doesn't like a little heat? Love, partnership and meaningful bonding are the only areas of experience worth your time and consideration this week, so don't bother with the usual distractions, the mental gyrations. Focus on meeting and merging while all this Sagittarian energy is available, and if a ritual feels right, make appropriate new-moon magic on Monday.

CANCER (JUNE 21—JULY 22)

More work for Mother? Nurturing, maternal Crabs could find themselves inundated with pleasant-enough duties, holiday projects and odd jobs after the new moon hits on Monday. When your ruling orb beckons, moon children follow directions—no ifs, ends or buts. This could turn out to be a happy, quiet week—fruitful, yet fun. Maybe you'll find another hobby to enjoy. If so, take advantage. Once Capricorn begins, you won't be calling the shots anymore; you might be ducking them instead.

LEO (JULY 23—AUG. 22)

Strictly for laughs. Fun is the focus of this week's agenda, so if you have an entertaining idea or you're entertaining, keep it light and go for the gusto. (Too many beer commercials, girls, too much football?) The higher the vibe, the better the bash. There's also an underlying passion for playacting that attracts a conventional Joel or Jill, the sort of extravagant behavior that leads to thriller-diller displays of affection—that swinging-chandelier thing you do so well.

VIRGO (AUG. 23—SEPT. 22)

Everything happening this week affects you on a personal level, within the confines of hearth and home, with maybe a foray out to the gym or the vet, and that should be it. So if you find yourself dealing with the government, banks, unions, etc., figure you're doing something wrong and read for a different sign. While the Sag new moon introduces new adventures on the homefront, but still within the loving arms of the family or your realtor, that's where you should be.

LIBRA (SEPT. 23—OCT. 22)

More of the same and that ain't half bad. No financial challenges, tests of negotiating skills or clever repartee this week, just the ordinary ebb and flow of shifting emotions, people and parties. The Sag new moon, however, can energize the neighborhood or bring a writing/teaching project to your front door. There's an air of excitement and curiosity, plus a willingness to deal with an old, dead love affair in a brave, new way. This assignment is totally optional, pass if you'd rather not play.

SCORPIO (OCT. 23—NOV. 21)

The Scorpio moon on Friday night could trip you up because it'll be real easy to misread romantic cues, to be led down the wrong aisle. Try to keep an emotional distance from what and whomever you are instantaneously attracted to or be prepared to pay (your Mars co-ruler is in your money house) the price. If neither alternative interests you, stay home and play hard to get. Sure. After the weekend there's an infusion of energy, a sense of adventure and financial opportunity, but no big deal.

SAGITTARIUS (NOV. 22—DEC. 21)

Happy birthday to the travelers, teachers and translators of the zodiac. Thank our lucky stars the new moon highlights a purely personal agenda, our solar first house, because there's little reason for anyone to pay us any attention at all this week. And since our Jupiter ruler is lurking in the reclusive 12th house, we'll probably opt for a very quiet, practically nonexistent birthday celebration this year. Well, maybe you'll get all fired up when Mars conjuncts your natal sun, but me, I'll get a fever.

CAPRICORN (DEC. 22—JAN. 20)

Unseen forces working on your behalf can spark an interest in a financial venture, but except for a soft, sexy Mars aspect to your Saturn ruler, not much is happening. Relax and enjoy the holiday spirit before winter officially sets in and you have to throw your weight around or play at being the CEO of this year's Christmas celebration. A Capricorn moon as the week begins can help you focus on the most emotionally satisfying options available. We wouldn't want to make the wrong choices now, would we?

AQUARIUS (JAN. 21—FEB. 18)

The best part of the Sagittarius season is how it legitimizes your natural propensity for hanging out, shooting the breeze and seeing what comes of it. No plans, no agenda, just the urge to get out and mix it up. Happily there's a purpose underlying your purported purposelessness, and that'll become apparent after Monday, after energetic, ballsy Mars contacts Saturn in your sign. But even that is no sweat...unless there's an unexpected sexual dividend in it for you.

PISCES (FEB. 19—MARCH 19)

Career planning in the middle of the holidays? As pointless as that might strike you, career and reputation is the area of your chart highlighted by the Sagittarius new moon. Don't be surprised if you're doing business over latkes, pushing projects in between lighting candles or trimming the tree. Family matters take on added importance as well, so make sure you pay attention to the men in your clan, the ones at the top of the totem pole, if they send a signal.

365 Days of Xmas Shopping

Although right now is the very apogee, the virtual coronation of the Christmas Tree Shop's reason-to-be, the store lives on, anointing in turn the particular needs of each holiday. At this crowded moment (happily, the crowds are made sparkly by seasonal cheer), you can get all sorts of amazingly inexpensive things for your tree, your house and your Christmas-decoration needs. Crinkly ribbon, Santa doorstops, fancy needlepoint, Christmas stockings, brass candlelamps for your window, angels and drums to drip from the tree; the products could hardly be more varied or inexpensive. The store offers surprisingly attractive books — not just the pink-plastic lava of cheap children's books or the tacky remainders — but "quality" classics, some art books, and even some marble-paper-covered poetry: Keats, Shelley, Shakespeare ... those guys. But to alert yourself to the fact that the Shops are also a regular upscale-bargain store, you'll want to keep an eye out for the ongoing stock's supra-seasonal things for everyday. In no particular order, you can find: fancy, foreign cookies and glamorous salad dressings; toffees in classy-blue tins; a gorgeous, wide desk chair covered in blue-spangled, gold-starred, flowered sheets; lamps and lampshades; delicately painted glassware; and luggage. The exterior of the place represents a New England village with cottages squashed fancifully together and a boat hanging off them. Shopping will be fun all year.

Sitting Pretty

Not just a place to shop for something to sit on, this store also provides an ongoing education in the aesthetics — the virtual architecture (since some of the famous chairs here are the work of architects) — of chairs. Museum-style panels explain the facts and history of the chairs, many of which are sufficiently historic to have names — the famous Wassily chair by Marcel Breuer, for instance. Made of chrome and belt leather, the Wassily positions the sitter imposingly in heroic, four-square centrality. And here, a few blocks from the LeCorbusier building at Harvard, is his elegant black-chaise lounge designed to separate the supporting and the supported; the chair almost looks like it's floating. The footrest of the well-known Eames chair, also black, seems to invite not so much a lazy boy, as a classy, ruminative one. Many other wooden chairs here, although also comfortable and practical, might be bought and loved for their looks. Some are modern arty; some are interestingly pure, wanting a hall and a wall to be shown off against. A little sofa, of sorts, filled with expandable, polystyrene pellets, suggests a backseat — minus the car — and comes with a 25-year warranty. And, amazingly, this furnishings course — er, store — features discounts of 20 percent and in some cases more. Parking next door.

The Greenwich Village Voice

Readers of the New York Times will remember the reviews and the voice of Anatole Broyard and his undepressing book, Intoxicated by My Illness, written while he was dying, in which his zigzag energy made a final loop-the-loop. Now, posthumously, a buried crocus blooms in the form of his memoir, written over time, of his years in jazzy, arty, sexy, experimental, post-War Greenwich Village. Just out into the world, and in a characteristic state of ecstatic receptivity, he takes on the crazy world of literature and art (meeting Delmore Schwartz, Maya Deren, Caitlan and Dylan Thomas, among others), psychoanalysis (which he manically confuses with literature) and romance. He informs his analyst, in a typically hungry way, that love accounts for "two thousand years of poetry," but that sex alone "can't account for all the laughing or crying. Otherwise, love wouldn't be so famous, we wouldn't be carrying on about it all the time." His own love life at the time was conducted with the comically pretentious painter Sheri Donatti. "She was a preview of things to come, an invention that was not quite perfected, but that would turn out to be important, a forerunner or harbinger, like the shattering of the object in Cubism or atonality in music. When I came to know her better, I thought of her as a new disease." Broyard's quirky, excited outlook makes you see that the Village he was observing in 1946 was enlivened by such characters as his very own self.

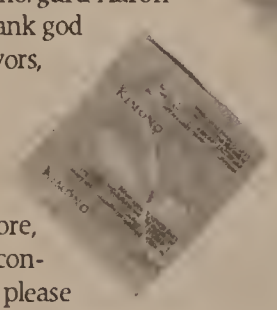
Toto Recall

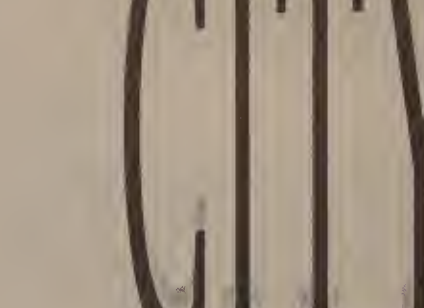


It's been out for a couple of months, and remains one of the most popular rentals around, but not nearly enough people are talking about Toto Les Heros (Paramount Home Video). This Belgian/French/German masterpiece won eight international awards, including the Camera d'Or from Cannes. The story, about an old man (Michel Bouquet) who must confront a lifetime's worth of envy, plays itself out in a delicate mixture of surrealism and familiarity. We're privy to Toto's memories of a childhood touched by death, incest and class inequity; we also watch the central love affair of his life unravel as an old nemesis resurfaces. The flick sounds like a downer but is consistently funny (instead of merely, as they say in criticese, "bittersweet"), and writer/director Jaco Van Dormael's touch is neither heavyhanded nor excessively esoteric.

SEX

Feelings

For the man in your life who bellyaches how he "can't feel anything" — ta da! — the new Kimono Sensation Plus condoms. Only on the market for two months, the new skins are selling like hotcakes at Condom World on Newbury Street. Dots on condoms are nothing new, but their placement on the inside of the prophylactic, with their consequent "massaging action," received our focus group's thumbs-up. The innovation "gives men a reason to wear condoms," says Condom World honcho/guru Aaron Cohen. (Thank god for small favors, bristled the female contingent of our focus group.) Before, me's No. 1 concern was to please the woman, revealed Cohen, but "now, it's every man for himself."



Onward, ho!

Erogenously enhanced Bostonians are also stocking up on the twin sensual forces of Kama Sutra Pleasure Balm and Oil of Love. The former numbs the erogenous zone of your choice so that you can, well, prolong things. The latter, described by Cohen as the "Emack & Bolio of erotic oils" for its variety in flavors, heats up and creates an individualized scent according to your own particular musk.

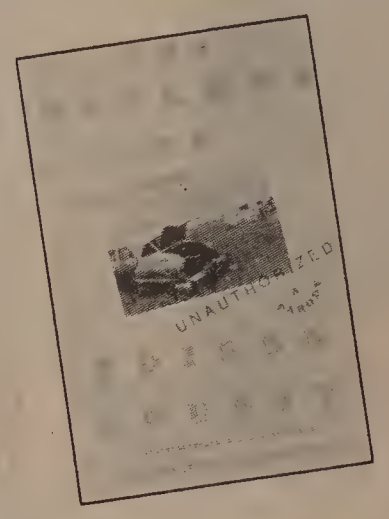
STOCKING STUFFER

Take Charge

While we're on the subject of prolonging things, the Buddy L Super Charger will not excite your beloved into a heightened state in view of the fact that it doesn't exude intoxicating aromas nor tickle those hard-to-reach zones. But, the Buddy L substantially extends the longevity of your alkalines. Based upon a newly discovered trickle-charging technology developed by a professor at McGill University, you can now (to the bane of battery companies) safely recharge your dead, disposable batteries.

Unlike common rechargeable batteries, which can be recharged almost forever but maintain a charge for far less than off-the-shelf disposables,each alkaline battery can be recharged 25 times.

SPORT



New Wave

If you can't get to the islands this year, ditch your board and wet suit in the closet and head down to your local dance club. It seems the Beantown Gen X scene just can't wait for summer (rots o' ruck, guys. Merry Christmas) and has caught the wave of the nation's hottest trend: Crowdsurfing. All it takes is loud music and a quick boost into the air before you find yourself pitching and rolling on a sea of 200 people you've never met before. Sound scary? It is, a little. But no mortal injuries have been reported so far and the view is to die for. Think of it as the ultimate trust fall. The surf is a little hard to forecast, but reportedly the best waves are to be found on the shores of Lansdowne Street.

BOOK

Parody On, Dude

Everyone's Favorite Book last year, The Bridges of Madison County, takes a beating in The Ditches of Edison County. Blaring an "Unauthorized: A Parody" warning on the cover, the book takes on the soppy love story of Francesca and Robert and transforms it, hilariously, into the Velveeta-laced romance of Pancetta and Ronald. Nothing's spared: Ronald Richard Roberts' parody spoofs the character anemia, sentimental appeal, psychobabble (uh, dialogue), and philosophical ramifications of Robert James Waller's best-seller. "Unconditional love requires great courage, spiritual faith, and sometimes, extraordinarily low intelligence," ruminates the first page of the Penguin Group-published tomes. Later: Ronald "was enthralled. He couldn't remember ever having cared much about kitchen accessories, yet suddenly he was obsessed with examining the knives, forks and spoons of a strange, sad and lonely woman. 'Well, if it's not too forward of me, I'd love to scrutinize your cutlery sometime.'" Replies Pancetta: "I guarantee you'll enjoy having my delicate instruments handle your meat."

TECHNOLOGY

You Are Here

It could make getting lost a thing of the past. You could use it to find your car at the mall, your way to a friend's ski house, the flight path to Nova Scotia or the trail through the jungles of Borneo. That's what the U.S. government had in mind when it recently opened to civilian use an extensive network of global-positioning satellites, hence the portable GPS, Global Positioning Receiver. The network, a Cold War biproduct used primarily for missile guidance and troop movement, can provide accuracy in longitude, latitude and altitude within 90 feet – anywhere on the globe. Prices range from $500 to $1699, with the basic models sporting features such as territory-map displays to units that flash only coordinate numbers.

TELEVISION

Blueb Tube

Kidnappings, holdups, car chases and a lot more than we ever got from Hill Street Blues or the Boston Police Department since Charles Stuart. NYPD Blue, the newest cop show on the block, barrels through proper TV etiquette, thrusting naked bodies and four-letter words in our face. "Not on my television!" conservative TV viewers said in horror as they mobilized a slew of attacks last summer, demanding its cancellation. But NYPD has survived to become one of ABC's top programs. Maybe it's just catering to the public's hunger for sex and violence; less-cynical people call it an unpolished, rough-on-the-edges look into the lives of cops working in a city that neither trusts nor respects them. They swear. They get sworn at. You'll swear you saw the former Boston police commissioner presiding over the mess.

THE SCENE

I Ben There

Confusion abounds. West Street Grill is officially hip, but by now, it's common knowledge even in Revere. It's too soon to tell about Sonsie, Armani exclusively serves the kiss-on-both-cheeks crowd, and Marais has become the leisure suit of the nightclub scene. The heir apparent to the young upscale professional (you know the acronym) club scene is the not-so-new Ben's Café in Maison Robert.

Located in the former Boston City Hall, the intimate downstairs bar has of late been the talk of exclusive-elbow-rubbing urbanites after an impressive mid-December soiree.

TUTU FUNKY: Prince wrote the music for the Joffrey's rock-ballet, which struts into the Hub Jan. 18-23.

FRIDAY

24 Why not spend the evening at home tonight with the radio (yes, radio!)? A Christmas Celtic Sojourn with host Brian O'Donovan, tonight from 7-8 p.m. Highlights include performances by the Chieftains and excerpts from A Child's Christmas in Wales, read by Dylan Thomas himself. Tune into WGBH, 89.7 FM, or 96.3 FM in the Back Bay.

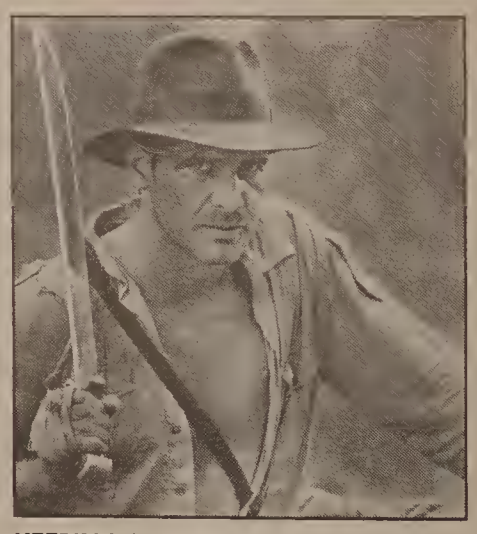
SATURDAY

25 If you've been considering decking the relatives instead of the halls this Christmas, maybe it's time you got out of the house. A hit musical about second chances, Forever Plaid might just add post-performance caroling to its Christmas Night show at 8 p.m., at the Park Plaza Hotel's Terrace Room, Arlington and Columbus Streets, Boston. Tickets are $28.50. Call 931-ARTS or stop by the theater.

FRIDAY

31 Aerosmith may be sold out at the Garden, but don't despair. We've compiled a list of Improper suggestions for your New Year's Eve pleasure. See our special section on the facing page.

SATURDAY



1 How much would you pay to avoid football today — $50? $100? Well, for a mere $4 (free for children) you can shop, shop, shop as 60 dealers from six states tempt you with their wares. The Castle Antique Show at the Park Plaza Castle (corner of Arlington Street and Columbus Avenue in Boston) will be open from 12 p.m.-6 p.m. Food will be available. Free parking, too! Call (508) 744-2731 for info.

SUNDAY

2 The Age of Rubens, the first major survey of Flemish-baroque painting ever mounted in the United States, closes after today. Comprising 120 paintings from more than 50 private collections and museums in America and Europe, this is an exhibit you'll tell your grandchildren about. And, today is your last chance to see it. (In case you don't know, the MFA is at 465 Huntington Ave., Boston, 267-9300.)

TUESDAY

4 Directly following tonight's performance of La Cage Aux Folles at the Shubert Theater, WGBH Radio's Ron Della Chiesa will host WGBH's Evening With the Stars, a benefit party for WGBH Public Broadcasting. At Roberta's Show-Biz Cafe (at the Charles Playhouse, 76 Warrenton St., Boston), guests will have the chance to enjoy refreshments while rubbing elbows with the cast of the Tony Award-winning musical. Tickets are $100, which includes the price of the show and the benefit. A one-year membership to WGBH is included in the price for non-members. Advance reservations are highly recommended. Call 492-2777 x3485

KEEPING UP WITH THE JONES: Get your Indy fill with a six-hour Indiana Jones fix on the Wang Center's 60-foot screen, Jan. 8-9.

SATURDAY

8 The Indiana Jones trilogy, back to back, will be brought to the big-big-big 60-feet screen as the Wang Center (270 Tremont St., Boston) goes to the movies, today and tomorrow, at noon both days. A snake pit will be provided, courtesy of the Franklin Park Zoo. Tickets are $10 and are available now. Call 482-9393.

MONDAY

10 Tonight at 7 p.m., the New England premiere of Jonathan Demme's new film, Philadelphia, starring Tom Hanks as a lawyer with AIDS, will be accompanied by a party to benefit the Harvard AIDS Institute. It all happens at the Charles Hotel, on the corner of Eliot and Bennett Streets, in Harvard Square, following the screening at the Harvard Square Loews. Tickets, $50-$150, are available by phone (351-0165). Consider yourself lucky: in New York, the tickets ran up to $2,500.

WEDNESDAY

12 Get out your elbow-length gloves and dust off your tails — it's opening night at the opera. The Boston Lyric Opera performs Carmen at the Emerson Majestic Theatre (219 Tremont St.). Lorraine Hunt and John Fowler sing the Bizet score, performed in French with projected English subtitles. There will be both a pre-opera dinner and a post-opera cast party (call 248-8811). Tickets are $75 per person for the pre- and post-events. For the opera itself, tickets are $18-$68 (call 248-8660). There will also be a pre-opera lecture, free with a ticket to tonight's performance, by director Ken Cazan, at the Tremont House (275 Tremont St.) from 6:30 to 7 p.m.

FRIDAY

14 At the Huntington Theatre (264 Huntington Ave.) starting Jan. 14, and running through Feb. 13, is Oscar Wilde's The Importance of Being Earnest. This is serious comedy — one of the best ever written. Call 266-0800 for tickets.

SATURDAY

15 The largest casino fund-raising evening in the Greater Boston area will be tonight at the Westin Hotel, Copley Place, Boston, from 9 p.m.-2 a.m. There will be dancing, gambling and general revelry as United Cerebral Palsy hosts its 11th annual All Night Celebration. This event will offer actual casino-style gambling — real money, folks, not the play stuff. Tickets are $15 per person, $25 per couple, available at the door or by phone, 926-5480.

SUNDAY

16 Renowned-soprano Kathleen Battle will be filling Symphony Hall with her dulcet tones today at 3 p.m., as part of the Bank of Boston Celebrity series. At press time, the program is yet to be announced, but Ms. Battle could make George Michael covers palatable. Tickets are $32, $30 and $20. Call 482-6661.

TUESDAY

18 Tonight and through Jan. 23, the Joffrey's blockbuster event, Billboards, travels up from NYC to our Wang Center, 270 Tremont St. Four different American choreographers combined their talents to Prince's score. Tonight at 8 p.m. (see Calendar for other dates and times). Tickets are $20-$40. Call 482-9393 for info, or 931-ARTS for tickets.

NEW YEAR'S EVE

BY LARA EWEN

This New Year's Eve doesn't have to be all about watching the ball drop in New York. Boston can be tons of fun, if you know where to look. The hotels are having swishy parties, and the bars will be packed. Here are some more suggestions:

STRUNG OUT: Ring in 1994 to the sounds of Deborah Henson-Conant's jazz harp at Zachary's Bar.

THE BOSTON ARIA GUILD PRESENTS: DIE FLEDERMAUS AND GRAND MASKED BALL
Sanders Theater, Corner of Quincy and Cambridge Streets, Harvard Square, 496-2222, starts at 7:30. Park for free at the Broadway Garage. Tickets for the operetta alone are $30-$40, and for just the Masked Ball, it's $35.

COLONNADE HOTEL
120 Huntington Ave., 424-7000, 9:30 p.m.-1:30 a.m.
Jazz-harp soloist Deborah Henson-Conant plays in Zachary's Bar. Tickets to this special solo-cabaret performance are $25. Plus, the hotel is offering a special, reduced room rate of $89 for guests attending any of its celebrations.

THE WORLD TRADE CENTER AND BAY STATE CRUISES CO-HOST:
THE WATERFRONT BALL
World Trade Center Ballroom, Boston, 723-7800, 7 p.m.-1 a.m.
The evening includes music, hors d'oeuvres, a sit-down dinner and a champagne toast at midnight. Plus, a fantastic view of First Night fireworks. Tickets are $75; $70 per person for groups of 15 or more.

COMEDY CONNECTION
Faneuil Hall, 248-9700, three shows tonight at 7, 9 and 11 p.m.
Comedian/actor Anthony Clark headlines. Tickets are $15-29. ID required.

SCULLERS JAZZ CLUB
Guest Quarters Suite Hotel, 400 Soldiers Field Rd., Boston, 783-0090, two shows, at 9 and 11 p.m.
New York Voices perform. The jazzy night includes dinner, hats, noisemakers, dancing in the hotel atrium, free parking and that inevitable champagne toast. Tickets are $65 and $85. Plus, the hotel is offering a two-room suite for $119 per couple. ID required.

BOSTON POPS
Symphony Hall, 266-1200, 8:30 p.m., concert at 10:30 p.m.
Harry Ellis Dickson leads the Pops Esplanade Orchestra. Hosted by Ron Della Chiesa, of WGBH Radio.
The night starts early with pre-concert festivities, including cocktails and dancing. This will be the last concert of the "Holiday Pops Series." Tickets are $28-$83. You can get them by phone, or by stopping by the box office.

ROXY BLOCK PARTY
279 Tremont St., Boston, 227-ROXY, 8 p.m.-2 a.m.
The night includes a dinner buffet, music by the White Heat Swing Orchestra and a DJ between sets, so the dancing never stops. The Times Square celebration will air on the big screen at 12 a.m., and there will be a champagne toast. At 12:30 a.m., the party moves to NYC Jukebox, Gal XC or Playoffs. Tickets are $39.94 and $59.94. ID required.

AVEROF INTERNATIONAL CELEBRATION
1924 Mass. Ave., Porter Square, 354-4500, 8 p.m.-3 a.m.

A LITTLE NIGHT MUSIC: The Ninots Roving Band lends its multicolored talents to the First Night merrymaking.

ceeds help the Canadian Club Celebrity Cup support the Jimmy Fund. Tickets are $25. ID required.

ICY STARES: Copley Square's ice sculpture has become a First Night tradition.

BUZZED IN BOSTON: Bostonians are increasingly turning to the cafe latte, cappuccino and espresso, indulging in an upscale caffeine scene new to the Hub.

Cafe Society

Story by Julie Flaherty Photos by Bina Altera

Making a show at the local cappuccino dispensary is the '90s answer to the club scene

So, there's nothing to drink in the house but the jug of homemade eggnog your aunt brought over for Thanksgiving? To avoid salmonella poisoning, you decide to brave the New England cold and head out for refreshment. On your last round of shopping or to kill time between the major holidays, why not go bar hopping? Coffee bars, that is. After all, making a show at the local cappuccino dispensary is the '90s answer to the club scene. Not that we have anything against the booze-and-browse scene, but everyone from middle management to Harvard profs knows that coffee culture is coming of age in Boston.

Choosing a coffee haunt is based 20 percent on taste and 80 percent on atmosphere. Let's face it, until recent years, Bostonians didn't know good coffee from acid rain. Coffee tastes are certainly becoming more "sophisticated," as those in the trade like to say. As a reward, the city has seen increasing quality and diversity in both the beans and the houses.

Still, there are requirements for a true coffee house. They should not have too much food. You should not feel like an ingrate when you bypass the three-page menu and say, "Just coffee, thanks." A good cafe is never irreverent to the simple cup of joe. Munchies and salads are acceptable, desserts highly desirable — but a cafe with more than a few entrees graduates to restaurant status. You should be able to hang out as long as you like (when your coffee begins to separate, it may be time to crawl along). You should be free to leave when you want and not have to hunt down the waitress for a bill.

NEVER BOARD: An afternoon of contemplation, chess and coffee at Trident Booksellers and Cafe..

My coffee route stuck to the main drag of the MBTA. Driving around on caffeine paranoia can be worse than the traditional drinking and driving.

Starting off in Davis Square, right off the Red Line, is the imminent future of coffee in Boston. At the Someday Cafe (51 Davis Square, Somerville, 623-3323), lattes and other "milk drinks," imports from the Northwest craze, are making their mark. The two Seattle proprietors have brought part of their lexicon of coffee lingo, as well: you can order your latte "skinny moo" (with skim milk) or "veggie moo" (soy milk). It's a spunky dive, and the proprietors work like dogs, but there are few tables. One of the proprietors cheerfully sweeps away a pile of Somerville Journals so I may sit on the window seat. But I opt to take my coconut-flavored latte across the street to hang with the public statues. The tiny house is sandwiched between the Somerville Theater and Buck a Book, the latter making the shop strategically located for touch-up holiday shopping. You may have to swim through stacks of Nancy Reagan biographies and cooking-with-wheat-germ tomes, but there is always something of note among the coffee-table books.

Back on the Red Line, I'm off to Algiers Coffee House at 40 Brattle Street (492-1557), just above the Brattle Theater. The Arabs were the first to brew coffee, and the shop pays homage to that by offering Arabic coffee by the pot, as well as trendy espresso specialties. The downstairs is like Ali Baba's cave: crowded, dark, low ceilings. The well-trod Persian rugs have become one with the tile floor, and the octagonal, wood tables are tipsy. But the second floor and its silo-shaped interior is bright and open, and the loud wooshing of the espressomakers is muted.

Also in the square is Cafe Pamplona, the best place to ponder New Year's resolutions. Claustrophobics beware: despite the whitewashed walls, this subterrranean niche is dark and cozy; with only a non-smoking corner (three of the dozen tables), it is sometimes cloudy. The room has a Daliesque feel, but I couldn't confirm whether it's the low ceiling or the black-and-white-checked floor that is slightly askew. On my particular run, the soup of the day was garlic, the coffee was hot and the pastries were chilled. The service is excellent, partly because you are never far from the waiter — or any of the patrons for that matter. All types have claimed the cafe, which serves standard espresso fare, as a hideaway. Three bearded men discussed fossil fuel, while in the darkest corner a woman scanned the room as she sketched something. I'm not sure what, because there is just enough room for the black-marble tables (their major cracks considerately covered with duct tape) and not much decoration. But there is plenty of room for ambiance and introspection.

A quick jaunt from Park Street brings me to the waterfront and the North End , just the place to be for the first snowfall, if and when it gets here. Friends who regularly travel to Italy say Caffe Vittoria (296 Hanover St., 227-7606) is the truest of the North End cafes. Surely, the menu of just coffees, desserts and liqueurs shows that Vittoria ("Victory") knows its place. During the day, it is a local kaffeeklatsch, where men sit for hours over short espressos. At night, the postpasta crowd arrives for the eclairs, and an interesting mix of tourists takes over. In between, during dinner hour, is the best time to go, and you can have your choice of seats. There is the balcony (really just a platform at the back of the shop) and the courtyard (a brick-walled alcove). Sit in the storefront behind the old-fashioned espressomaker on display and people-watch. The newer section almost doubles the size of the cafe, although it looks more like a '50s diner with its chrome-treated decor.

A good cafe is never irreverent to the simple cup of joe. Munchies and salads are acceptable, desserts highly desirable — but a cafe with more than a few entrees graduates to restaurant status.

The check comes with the service, but it is worthwhile to linger. Like any Italian grandmother's home, curio cabinets display a motley mix of treasures: porcelain dishes and figurines, Perugina chocolate, baby pictures. Behind the wooden bar, the long-time barista, head-shaved dolpi-style, works the espresso machine, a more-modern version than the ones on display, including one of the first espressomakers made in the United States. The caffe mocha is served messy and rich, and a dish of gelati complements the brisk outdoors when you're listening to "Have Yourself a Merry Little Christmas " on the jukebox.

ESPRESSO LANE: Bostonians are choosing espresso over a plain-old-boring cup of joe.

TAKE A WALK ON THE OTHER SIDE: At The Other Side Cafe, telling the waiters apart from the patrons is hard, since the whole group looks like an off-campus party in Allston.

Yes, I know. Who can think of relaxing when there is so much more shopping to do? Luckily, the newer coffee shops are combining the power of caffeine with point-of-purchase sales. Truly all coffee-hopping roads (in this case the Green Line West) lead to the Coffee Connection. Although the service at all locations is erratic, they make a splendid cup of coffee, be it the American variety or the espresso drinks. Plus, the stores are decked out for the holiday season. After the high-brow end of Newbury Street closes down at 7 p.m., do some window-shopping and stop by the Coffee Connection at 165 Newbury St., which stays open until 10 or 11 most nights. There are only five two-person tables, and there is no people-watching while the displays block the picture window, but you can get that last-minute espressomaker or chocolate-covered-bean gift for your favorite java junkies. Even better, for the better-late-than-a-necktie gift list, fly an assortment of fresh-roast-and-ground to them.

There is the other, larger Coffee Connection on the other side of Hereford, but if you're trekking down to the lower end, don't pass by Trident Booksellers and Cafe (338 Newbury St., 267-8688). After passing through the first wall of incense, it's the perfect place to find that gift for your friend that is so hard to shop for. Especially if she's a lesbian Buddhist with an interest in photography. The books cover most of the bases, but the emphasis is on the creative, the avant-garde, the mystical, the deranged and the neoteric. I ask a salesperson what the last one means. She isn't sure, either.

If you're not sure if your victim, er, friend will like her gift, bring it to a table and try it out over a juice drink and a scone — the latter is addictive. The hanging-out area, where you can also get a few meatless luncheon foods, has been revamped over the last couple of years, but it is still a good place to get a caffeine high and have a heated discussion over Nietzsche and/or body massage (references close at hand). If you're alone, it's not hard to join in on someone else's argument. Or befriend a bonsai — no one will notice — which are adorable when trimmed for Christmas. I sip my cappuccino and wonder if anyone has listed his or her bridal registry here: Brides flipping through the display book of tarot-card designs, making a list of desired-magazine subscriptions.

I realize that the caffeine is getting to me, so I continue up Mass. Ave., first stopping at Urban Outfitters to make sure my attire is appropriate for the last stop. At The Other Side Cafe (407 Newbury St., 536-9477), plaids, nose rings and berets are the required dress for the grunge scene. Funky jazz — played loud — keeps the conversations full-throated and the atmosphere clublike. This coffee house has a great location: between Berklee to the south, BU to the west and MIT just over the bridge.

There is a dinerlike bar, but for the tablebound, the service is waiter-powered, which means you could go unnoticed in one of the dark corners of the loft. Telling the waiters apart from the patrons is hard, since the whole group looks like an off-campus party in Allston. The furniture is junk couture from a Hadassah resale, complete with mismatched '60s-Formica dinettes, broken folding chairs and lumpy couches. When the college crowd leaves for the holidays; come lounge with friends, put up your feet, and fend off the New Year's hangover. ❑

Practical Tips to Maximize Your Time on the Slopes

By Jay Paris and Carmi Zona-Paris

GET VERTICAL: For the serious skier, Sunday River offers the best vertical drop with the shortest lines.

"Simply reaching the ski slope fully equipped and reasonably fit is how a majority of ski time is spent. Consider these practical tips to master the rituals before stepping into your bindings."

Compare the number of hours you actually slide down the slopes to the number of hours you spend choosing, rounding up and tuning equipment; shopping for ski clothing and accessories; packing; loading the car; traveling to the resort; waiting in lift lines; defrosting in lodges; driving home; and unpacking. If you are a social skier, your ratio of pre-exercise ritual to actual skiing may be eight to one, and if you are a no-nonsense skier, your ratio might be six to one.

If you accept our hypothesis that simply reaching the ski slope fully equipped and reasonably fit is how a majority of your ski time is spent, consider these practical tips to master the rituals before stepping into your bindings.

Boots

We've talked to countless experts and have fallen down many mountains between Vail and Wachusett. For certain, the most important piece of ski equipment is your boots. And finding someone who knows how to fit you properly is not easy. To maximize the contact between your foot and the ski, you need to minimize the space in your boot when leaning forward — on a slope — which is a very different sensation from standing on a flat, stationary floor. A ski boot should feel uncomfortably small in the showroom. In fact, the rule of thumb is to find a boot that feels moderately snug, and then try on one size smaller. If that still feels comfortable, try two sizes smaller. Typically, to counter a loose, ill-fitting boot, skiers crank down their boot winches, putting uneven pressure on the ankle and foot, which slows down circulation. If you suffer from cold feet when skiing, your boot may well be too large. Watch ski racers. Their boots are so uncomfortably small that unlocking their boots is the first thing they do upon crossing the finish line.

Cold Feet

Another remedy to cold feet is so simple it is usually overlooked, ruining many a ski day. Preheat your boots. If you leave your boots in a cold trunk, or in an unheated room where temperatures are below freezing, it takes the complex layers of plastic literally hours to warm. How many skiers don cold boots in the morning and have cold feet all day long? Or almost as bad, how often do skiers walk from the parking lot of a resort to the lodge, trampling through the briny puddles of half-melted snow in ski socks and running shoes, only to slide into boots with damp or wet socks. Dry socks, silly as it sounds, can make the difference between a cold day of skiing and reasonable comfort.

Lost Luggage

It only takes one incident of lost luggage to realize the wisdom of a well-planned packing strategy and it happens to tens of thousands of skiers each winter. Skis are the last pieces of luggage to be loaded into the underbelly of a plane. More skis and bags are lost in Chicago than in other city in the world — that being the city where all-too-many skiers make westward connections. Most are recovered, but usually two days later. On a five-day skiing trip to Utah or Colorado, the loss is severe. We suggest buying a carry-on boot bag (there are endless varieties in the $50 range) and stuffing your boots with a toothbrush, a light-nylon windbreaker and pants, and polypropylene underwear. Stow the valise overhead while wearing a sweater, ski socks and ski gloves. If you become one of the airline's unlucky victims, you can rent skis (for which you can be reimbursed by the airline) and still enjoy two days of skiing before you and your clothes become overly ripe.

"If you suffer from cold feet when skiing, your boots may well be too large. Watch ski racers. Their boots are so uncomfortably small that unlocking their boots is the first thing they do upon crossing the finish line."

Clothing

While we're on the subject of clothes — if they make the man, they don't make the skier, despite Newbury Street myths to the contrary. Today, there is actually an inverse-dress law prevailing on the slopes. The casual, social or party skier is much more likely to be wearing the $400 Roffe ski parka or the gortex-lined, sweat-wicking K2 jumpsuit, even through the lodge lounge. The extreme skiers — the die-hard masters of moguls — are irreverently shabby. They tend to wear simple jackets or nylon shells over fleece vests and worn blue jeans, giving in to ski couture with an occasional beret or bright headband. They will wear, however, the finest eyewear on the slopes, realizing that depth perception at high speed is only slightly less critical than their choice of boots and skis. Extreme skiers and no-nonsense skiers always have their sunglasses well secured to their heads or clothes in noticeably strong ways. Good eyewear at the Ski Market on Commonwealth Ave. or at one of the Ski Haus shops in suburban Boston is half as expensive as the same item selling at a mountain-side ski shop. Yet, expensive sunglasses are the most commonly lost item and most commonly purchased equipment at ski resorts.

The Hill

For the social skier, the hill of choice is still Vail in the Rockies and Killington in New England. For the more serious skier, Sunday River offers the best vertical drop with the shortest lines, thanks to high-speed quad lifts. The discovery of the year is Marble Mountain in Newfoundland, reachable on Air Canada packages.

The trails are superb with better vertical than anything in the Laurentians, and the climate is surprisingly moderated by the sea. If you like skiing powder amid moose and bald eagles, consider this foray into wilderness; it's inexpensive and only a few flying hours away.

Boston's Best

Best boot-fitters: Bob Smith Sporting Goods. Plan on spending at least an hour there as the staff analyzes your foot and your price range and offers a guarantee for a perfect fit, even after a field trial.

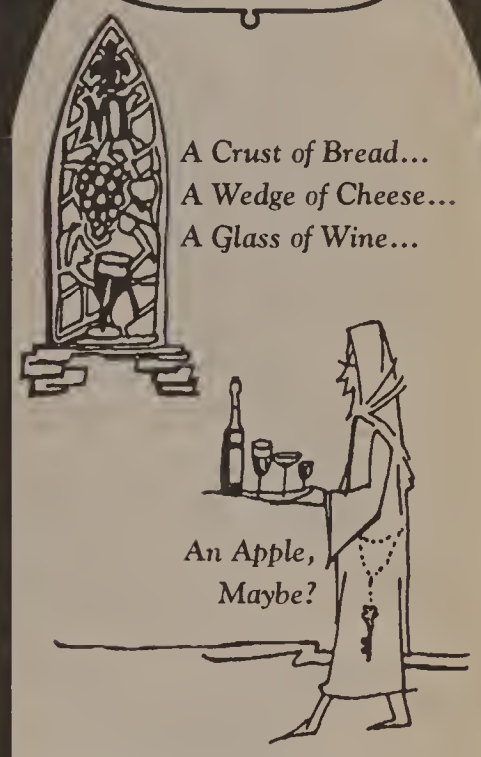
Best equipment deals: Ski Market opposite Boston University. They accept trade-ins, do repairs and have a large inventory for most budgets.

Best skiing opportunity: free rentals, lessons and lift tickets at Sunday River between 8-11 a.m. every morning.

Best adventure: Marble Mountain in Newfoundland (contact Air Canada).

Best hill within two hours: Waterville for family; Loon for singles and couples.

Best hill within four hours: Killington for overall variety of skiing and social activity.



Best hill within five hours: Stowe for best natural snow, most pleasant environment, superior vertical and plenty of after-hours activities. ❑

A DANGEROUS WOMAN

Try as she might, Debra Winger can't save this film. She bravely attempts to flesh out a believable portrait of a meek, childlike woman with real guts, but she's done in by the TV-movie trappings of the plot. Winger's character wants love and respect, but her truth-telling is unwelcome in a world of people who take advantage of her and cheat on each other. It's a potentially compelling imbalance of power, but even actors as good as Barbara Hershey and David Strathairn can't raise their characters above stereotypes. Worst of all is Gabriel Byrne's over-the-top performance as an alcoholic Irish carpenter who is the first person to treat Winger with kindness, although even he ends up mistreating her. The film sorely needs a doctor to administer some plausibility.

GERONIMO: AN AMERICAN LEGEND

You can get a better sense of the Geronimo story from a few paragraphs in a history textbook than from this flimsy, forgettable work by director Walter Hill. The film's politically correct plot (the "White Eye" are the bad guys) is so choppy that it's often unclear on what side each man — including Geronimo, played by Wes Studi — stands. We learn little of Geronimo's background, his family or his way of life. We see him only in the twilight of his career. The same is true of the military men played by Robert Duvall and Gene Hackman. The film is instead crammed with cliched close-ups of hurt looks in Indians' eyes and of dead bodies strewn across the desert. The only resolution is the resignation of one sensitive misfit (Matt Damon) from the cavalry.

GRUMPY OLD MEN

Jack Lemmon and Walter Matthau are two lifelong Minnesota neighbors who never outgrew a hankering for mutual childish pranks and general competition (these days, it's "my gallstone is twice as painful as your ulcer"). When a wacky but lovable Berkeley professor (Ann-Margret) moves into the neighborhood, the old men vie for her affections. Their (mostly) vain attempts at recapturing youth are as hilarious as their constant bickering and name-calling. Both win our affections and despite the fun, we truly want them to reconcile. Burgess Meredith also gives a great performance as Lemmon's dad, a sex-mad, foul-mouthed nonagenarian.

I've seen Tootsie, and believe me, it's no Tootsie. Even more than most of Robin Williams' films, this contrived farce alternately soars and plummets on his manic flights of fancy. Without his singular comic genius, the film would be a pile of John Hughesian mush about how divorcing parents should not hurt their kids. Williams plays a father who can only see his kids by going undercover as an elderly British nanny because his ex-wife (Sally Fields in a thankless role) detests his childishness. The repeated transformations grow old quickly and the cooking disasters are cliched, but Williams' irrepressible need to bust your gut is hard to deny. His riffs in the guise of a hip-hop, grand motherly Mr. Rogers-in-drag are often great fun, even if it all feels fairly insincere.

SCHINDLER'S LIST

This is a Steven Spielberg film? In radical opposition to his previous movies, he shoots in expressionistic black-and-white tones, refuses to flinch from the horrors of the Holocaust and embraces ambiguity. Spielberg has gone back to his Jewish roots and tried to understand why a Nazi businessman, Oskar Schindler (brilliantly played by Liam Neeson), risked his life to save several-hundred Jews employed in his metalworks factory. The bloated film — just over three hours — has some serious flaws, chiefly Spielberg's understandable tendency to forget about Schindler so as to give a fuller sense of the unspeakable, inhuman treatment of the Jews in the ghettos and extermination camps. But there are also ghastly images that won't soon be forgotten, such as the blazing funeral pyres of bodies and a child's trying to hide in a latrine.

INTERVIEW: BY KAJ WILSON
THE SNAPPER'S DIRECTOR STEPHEN FREARS

During this year's Toronto International Film Festival, director Stephen Frears, actor Colm Meaney and producer Lynda Myles answered questions about their film, The Snapper. Most of the questions were directed at Frears, who was articulate, witty, engaging and self-effacing.

"I always wanted to make a film in Ireland. But I always felt like an outsider. I come from an imperialist race and had a lot to apologize for. Lynda and Colm guided me through it.

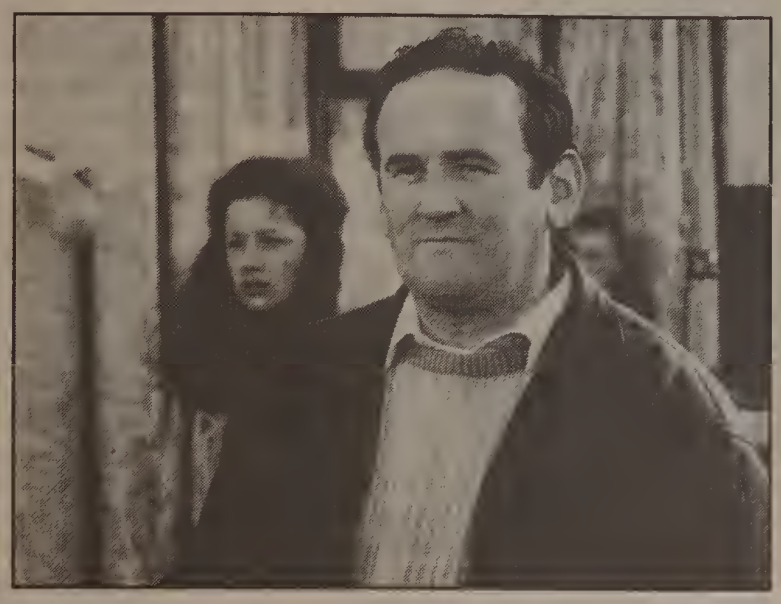
"Roddy Doyle [author of the book on which the movie is based and the screenwriter] teaches geography and English. He worked about 150 yards from the set and would stop by. We gave him a beeper and he'd call up after the period. He's very conscientious.

"If you were to ask me how my films are similar, I would say it has to do with the quality of the language. I'm very clever. I work with good writers. I grew up with films with wonderful dialogue. Good dialogue gives me great pleasure.

"Family dominates my life. I can't think of anything more chaotic than family life. And Roddy writes about it so well. It seems to me that the situation in The Snapper is a serious one, although perhaps I feel that way because I'm getting older, and I've got a daughter, a 9-year-old. I hope I'd behave as well as Des does under the circumstances.

"As far as my films having, as you say, a 'darkly comic sensibility,' I don't sit around saying, 'This is too cheerful for me, this will sit badly with my oeuvre.' I'm on my knees with gratitude when a good script comes in the post. I remember thinking that my contribution to My Beautiful Laundrette was realizing how good the script was when it came across my desk.

"Have I planned my films? Americans have these things called 'careers.' They have five films and they know what they're about or where they'll be. There's a wonderful quote by David Lean: You come up out of a rabbit hole. It's a different hole each time. For a time, you lose yourself.



"There is no British film industry. It's gone. The world wants American films, not British films. But there seems to be a lot of spirited people who keep making films. At Cannes this year, I was astounded when almost 10 films came up." ❑

It's a . . . Keeper

"...The Snapper is a little gem: a high-spirited, unpretentious, cheeky Irish celebration of family life and pregnancy..."

'Tis the season when Hollywood contributes to Christmas craziness by wheeling out too many big, shiny packages for audiences and the Academy to ooh and ah over. Here's hoping that The Snapper isn't lost in the crush. Directed by Stephen Frears, the film is a little gem: a high-spirited, unpretentious, cheeky Irish celebration of family life that begins with a pregnancy and ends with a snapper (Dublin slang for a newborn).

DADDY DEAREST: Colm Meaney stars as the father who rises to the occasionof his daughter's unwanted, unmarried pregnancy.*

The working-class Curleys — father Dessie (Colm Meaney), mother Kay (Ruth McCabe) and their six children — seem to be in a state of perpetual motion. Even when they sit still, their mouths are moving. It's a wonder they all fit in their cramped Dublin rowhouse. Twenty-year-old daughter Sharon livens up this already lively household when she announces she's pregnant and refuses to name the father. Word of her condition moves at lightning speed through the neighborhood grapevine, and soon the upset becomes an uproar when the identity of the father finally surfaces. That's about it; if the story sometimes seems a little thin and the family antics a bit precious; the terrific acting, sparkling dialogue and lively pace more than compensate.

The Snapper is the second novel in Dubliner Roddy Doyle's Barrytown trilogy; The Commitments is the first. Dessie was last seen briefly in the movie The Commitments as band-manager Jimmy Rabbitte's Elvis-worshipping father. The Rabbittes became the Curleys so that no one, including Twentieth Century Fox, who owns the rights to The Commitments, would mistake The Snapper for a sequel.

Directed by: Stephen Frears

Screenplay by: Roddy Doyle

Playing at: Loews Harvard Square

Dessie is a sweetheart: a warm, funny, generous man who loves his family and his Guinness. He accepts playing second fiddle to his beautiful, wry wife and not being taken seriously: "I'm the dad, he'd only laugh at me." Dessie adores his oldest daughter Sharon, and she, him. Like many dads, he's a combination father-protector and suitor. "You're my knight in shining armor," Sharon tells him when Dessie gets into a fight defending her honor. The dark, unspoken joke is how much the father of Sharon's baby resembles dear old Dad, but lacks Dad's appeal.

As her pregnancy advances, Sharon becomes more womanly, more like her mother. Dessie becomes more loving and genuinely excited by the baby's arrival, until at last he doesn't care who the father is. As confident and secure as Kay is, she's not above being a little jealous of her daughter, although she'd be the first to admit that, thanks to Sharon, her sex life has improved. Dessie has taken to reading about pregnancy and the female anatomy and applies what he learns in bed.

For all its sunniness, the movie has a gritty, harsh side that fans of Frears' My Beautiful Laundrette and The Grifters will welcome and that gives the movie texture. The neighbors are petty and judgmental. Her girlfriends are only half-joking when they tell her they'd rather not be seen with her at the clubs for fear her belly will ward off suitors. It's hard to blame them. Opportunities for romance and happiness seem limited. Maybe that's why they drink so much. A flashback scene of the baby's conception — a drunken encounter on the hood of a parked car — is pathetic and all too believable. Even when pregnant, Sharon entertains herself by pub-crawling and getting smashed with her friends.

Tina Kellegher is wonderful. Her Sharon is smart-mouthed, stubborn and down-to-earth. She's ordinary and special. She has a rubbery, expressive face and a solid generous core; after a while, you think she's beautiful.

Curley family life may be chaotic, but it's a warm haven. By celebrating birth, the family and the ordinary, The Snapper captures the spirit of Christmas at its best. ❑

Blind Ambition

"...Out of Sight is an uncompromised, unexpected take on a blind woman, but what a blind woman! Put away all your sentimental, politically correct assumptions..."

1993 ends in a properly celebratory way in Boston, with the world premiere at the MFA of a challenging documentary feature, Out of Sight, by an important locally based filmmaker, Newton's David Sutherland.

Let me say immediately that Sutherland's fine documentaries — among them, splendidly oddball appreciations of eccentric artists Paul Cadmus and Jack Levine, and an insightful look at the male psyche, Half-time: Five Yale Men at Mid-Life — should be far better known. But, among area documentarians, Sutherland goes his own quiet, non-public way. He never attended nor taught at Harvard or MIT, the de rigueur schools for local filmmakers. He never worked "in-house" at WGBH. He has no association with Boston's documentary "famous": Ross McElwee, Richard Leacock, Frederick Wiseman, Errol Morris.

In fact, Sutherland studied film in — ugh! — LA., at Hollywood-driven USC. Then back in Boston in the family business, he only became a filmmaker by default, after his father's tire store burned down. Nowadays, where does he hang out? In this Newton home's basement, converted into an editing room. He's there year round, worrying and obsessing about his movies, accompanied always by his wife, Nancy, the able co-producer and co-decisionmaker on Out of Sight.

EYE TO EYE: "I don't know if America is ready for a blind person who is not a goody-two-shoes," says Diane, the heroine of Newton-resident David Sutherland's documentary Out of Sight.

As always with Sutherland, Out of Sight is an uncompromised, unexpected take on a documentary subject. It's a film about a blind woman, but what a blind woman! Put away all your sentimental, politically correct assumptions. Northern Californian Diane Starin, Sutherland's focus, is a hellion out of a 1940s Hollywood film noir. A tough-as-nails Barbara Stanwyck, who, with her dolled-up blond girlfriend, Jillian, meanders out to roadhouses at night.

There, she picks up hot-to-trot, big-bellied cowboys and salivating salesmen. She cheats on her older, ailing boyfriend, Herb, an alcoholic rancher. And Diane and her mom, Harriet, count the days for Herb to die of cancer ... and leave Diane his ranch and property.

Sutherland includes sequences showing Diane in a somewhat sympathetic light, i.e., when she is acting as mentor to a 15-year-old blind girl and when she demonstrates her tremendous prowess as a horsewoman despite her lack of sight. Diane is an articulate young woman, and she obviously has tremendous will power and fortitude. Also, to her credit, she's completely unapologetic about her blindness.

Ultimately, however, Diane is a shrill, chilling screen presence; she seems so wrong about how to conduct her life. There is something pathetic, deadening, in watching her compulsively return to the dance floor for another pickup.

Some of Out of Sight is hilarious black comedy, but some of it is plain ghoulish. And I don't mean the scene in which Diane casually washes her eyeball in the sink and returns it to its socket. I mean being privy to Diane's self-deceptions, yes, her "moral blindness"; the selfish ways she treats boyfriend Herb who, although not especially articulate or self-reflective, seems a decent old guy.

"I'm in my 30s, living with a man in his 60s, in a relationship which deals with alcohol and infidelity," Diane says in the movie. "I don't now if America is ready for a blind person who is not a goody-two-shoes."

I don't know, either.

Out of Sight hasn't yet located a distributor willing to buy rights and find out.

AIDS Remembrance

There have been many AIDS-remembrance articles about people in the arts — actors, dancers, directors — but none to my knowledge mentioning the decimation in my profession, film criticism. So, I'll end 1993 by recalling, among many deaths:

Jay Scott, the brilliant critic for the Toronto Globe and Mail, who died this August. My friend.

Stuart Byron, one-time critic for Boston's Real Paper and the Village Voice, who was probably the first in America to discuss personal, gay issues in his columns.

Stephen Harvey, the kindly, helpful film curator at New York's Museum of Modern Art, who authored the beautiful study, Directed by Vincente Minnelli.

Vito Russo, whose book The Celluloid Closet is the classic about homosexuality in the movies. ❑

Amy Persky Gross
Sew Happy

By Johanna Roveto

Rows of industrial sewing machines and tables covered with fabric fill the room; boxes of beads, embroidery and pearls hang above. Side rooms hold stainless-steel sinks and rows of RIT dye, tutus, elaborate costumes, and dancers' shoes. Moving from table to table among the staff of nine is Amy Persky Gross, wardrobe director for the Boston Ballet, who is also responsible for the 200 costumes currently seen on The Nutcracker's stage.

Persky Gross oversees every aspect, from the designs to the fitting sessions. For a single costume, up to 12 fabrics may be used, which are bought in white, dyed to meet color specifications, and prewashed. Each bead or pearl is hand-sewn, not glued, and knotted off separately so that one loose bead does not affect an entire string.

"You need to be really organized," says Persky Gross. "But you live it. It's in your head. You have lists, charts and a bible for each show with sketches, swatches, notes on where it was bought, how it was dyed. Kim (Vercoe, associate director) is invaluable, with her textile background."

Persky Gross discovered costumes during graduate school, when her interest in painting shifted to the possibilities of fabric. She started as a milliner, painting headpieces and dying fabrics and tights. "It is very hands-on work, which I love. Every costume is built individually to last, to move. People in the shop have different backgrounds, so we learn from each other with each production."

Even when a show is remounted, work begins well in advance. Costumes for the Nutcracker's 50 performances are measured in July, and retrimmed for a fresh look. Patterns are stored, should a costume need complete updating. Costumes are individualized as much possible for the best fit. "The dancers are great to work with, so you really want to do everything you can for them."

"We don't redesign any costumes," she adds. "My job is to maintain the integrity. A color may change slightly, to reflect modern palettes, but they always evoke a similar feeling."

The team is currently focused on spring 1994, when it will work simultaneously on costumes for up to eight programs. A number of new programs will require more intensive demands. The rewards, Persky Gross says, are worth it.

"Sleeping Beauty was a monster," she says, noting there were more than 300 costumes for the show, "but a beautiful-and-a-fun monster." ❑

WORLD-CLASS: The dynamic-playing style of Winchester-based, virtuoso-clarinetist Richard Stoltzman are is world renowned. He can also make a mean linzer torte and follows the Sox.

Richard Stoltzman
Virtuoso and Swell Guy

By Julia Hanna

Richard Stoltzman is a virtuoso and a swell guy. The Winchester-based but world-renowned clarinetist's versatility as a dynamic performer is legendary, to say nothing of the fact that he makes a mean linzer torte, a result of time spent at that little cooking school around the corner, London's Cordon Bleu. As adroit with words as he is with musical notes, Stoltzman fired back fast-talkin', no-nonsense answers (folks from his hometown of Omaha would be proud) to the following questions:

"Do you consider yourself a classical musician—" "Yes." "...who is very good at jazz —" "No." "...or a jazz musician who is very good at classical music?" "Yes."

Stoltzman went on to elaborate slightly: "I was trained as a classical musician. The only reason why I love jazz is that my dad pointed out what he felt was the best classical music, and it was the big bands. So I listened to big bands all the time when I was growing up, because that was the music my father felt I should listen to if I was going to be a decent human being." No doubt he did Dad proud by inviting Benny Goodman to his Carnegie Hall debut, sort of proud, anyway. "I never thought he would show up, and as it turns out, he did. So, anyway, when it was time to introduce this great legend to the whole audience, I said, 'We have with us tonight Benny Goodman,' and he stood up in his box. I started clapping like everyone else and as I was clapping my clarinet fell apart and rolled across the floor of Carnegie Hall. I was running after it and trying to put it back together. Anyway, we got through the rest of the program."

Stoltzman himself was the legend of honor at WGBH radio's fall banquet celebration for the ear and the belly, aptly called "An Evening With Richard Stoltzman." The program opened with the "Sonata for Clarinet and Piano in f minor" by Brahms (Irma Vallecillo accompanied) and a rare all-live performance of Steve Reich's "New York Counterpoint" with the New England Conservatory of Music Clarinet Choir.

Does he get the same pleasure from playing Reich as he does a more accessible composer such as Gershwin? "I get pleasure out of playing for people. If the people hate the pieces that I play, I don't get as much pleasure out of it. You want the audience to have some kind of meaningful and, hopefully, enriching experience."

The audience obviously felt precisely that. One man, a priest, remarked on the "blessing" that brought Stoltzman (who followed his wife, first violinist of the Muir String quartet) to Boston.

"We love this community ..." Stoltzman responded, "If the Red Sox could just ...." The Sox just couldn't. But as long as they do well enough to keep Richard Stoltzman around, we're willing to bear with them, too. Just. ❑

To Hal and Back

"... The ART's Henry IV is a splendidly accessible epic, turning a ponderous text into a vibrant tale of political intrigue and personal triumph..."

ROYALLY GOOD: Prince Hal, played by Bill Camp, carouses with Falstaff, played by Jeremy Geidt in a 15th-century-tavern-turned-neon '50s diner in the exuberantly designed ART production of Henry IV.

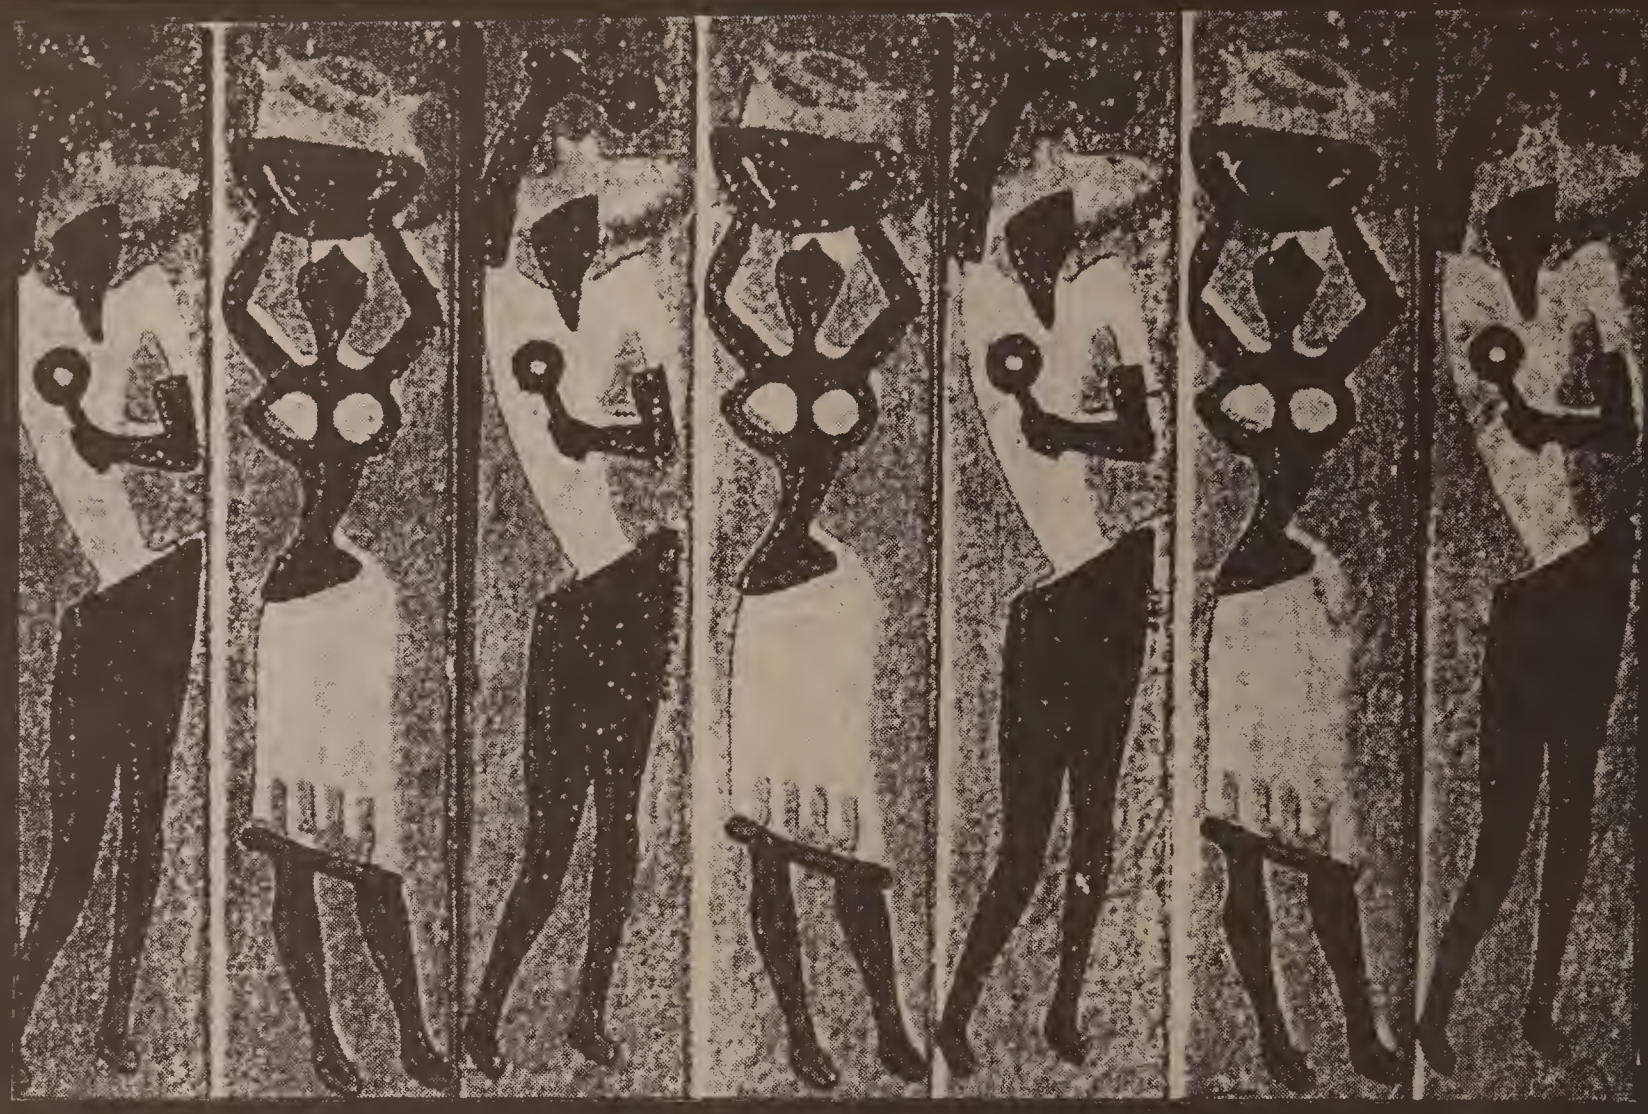
If you've a mind to tackle Shakespeare's Henry IV, toss out the books and notes, and get yourself to the Loeb Drama Center, where the American Repertory Theater is serving up a two-part mounting full of spirit and artistry. Although the text is dense and ponderous, director Ron Daniels has done wonders to enliven six hours and seamlessly stitch the diverse scenes (both noble and profane) into a majestic pageant.

The ART is presenting "Part I" and "Part II" on different nights, and together on certain Sundays. I recommend viewing in chronological order. "Part I," which takes a while to accelerate, is the superior work; and here, its second act is stronger than its first. "Part II" has lots of filler, and although eventually dealing with important issues, spends a long time getting ready for uncertain developments. Some scenes are better than others in the broad array, but the collective weight of the production — its compelling epic sweep — is what impresses the most.

Henry IV chronicles the transformation of the wastrel Prince Hal into the dutiful Henry V, as his father, King Henry IV, is beset by rebels near the end of his reign. Nearly a decade earlier, Richard II had been deposed and King Henry set upon the throne. Now, factional strife and misrule have supplanted that initial hope. Racked with guilt over usurping the crown and fighting erstwhile friends, Henry IV is also troubled by his unworthy heir apparent: a madcap who spends his time carousing with old Jack Falstaff and his boisterous cronies.



Shakespeare artfully balances scenes in court, in the rebel camp, and in Falstaff's rowdy world. Daniels does him one better, by fracturing time to create a kind of timeless resonance. His battle scenes look like American Civil War settings, but the sounds include a Vietnam-era helicopter and contemporary artillery. The king's foes are a collection of 1930s fascists, Native Americans, and Andean peasants, and Falstaff's Eastcheap tavern is a chrome-and-vinyl diner from the 1950s. The eclectic design works well without upstaging the action, even if it does become a little overassertive in the second part.

The success of the production lies in the vigorously detailed performances, which always command attention and ensure that we follow developments. Bill Camp is impressive as Hal, whose pose as a modern punk rocker (spiky blond hair, T-shirt and jeans) seems to have been taken as a hedge against destiny rather than a weak nature. Although his prince never seems as sullied as his reputation, he matures steadily before our eyes, vindicating himself in battle and winning back his father's affection. Royal Miller delivers a dazzling performance as the fiery antagonist Hotspur. He dominates the first act with vibrant detail and rich emotion, building to some thrilling, if fatal, swordplay against Hal at Shrewsbury. It's memorable work. Jeremy Geidt is a wonderful rogue as the corpulent, licentious Falstaff; yet there's much social commentary when he moves on to recruit men for the King's army, and true poignancy in his final banishment. John Conklin's bare set, with its gleaming red walls and floor, relies on sliding panels, curtains, neon signs and a few props to mark various locations. Frances Aronson's lighting is wonderfully varied and evocative and Gabriel Berry's costumes are truly a motley.

The ART's Henry IV is a splendidly accessible epic. Daniels and company have turned a ponderous text into a vibrant tale of political intrigue and personal triumph.

The Who's Tommy

Loud and spectacular, at least in its visual and aural elements, The Who's Tommy's propulsive score and non-stop multimedia imagery certainly validate this rock opera as a high-tech sensation. The glory of the production lies in director Des McAnuff's brilliant staging, which sweeps through time and place in breathtaking wonder. But when you leave the Colonial Theatre (where this work will be on view through Jan. 15), you may feel rather disappointed by its wimpy story. It's not really clear what Tommy aims to tell us; but even if you guess right, you'll find it dramatically wanting. ❑

HOPE AND PRAYER

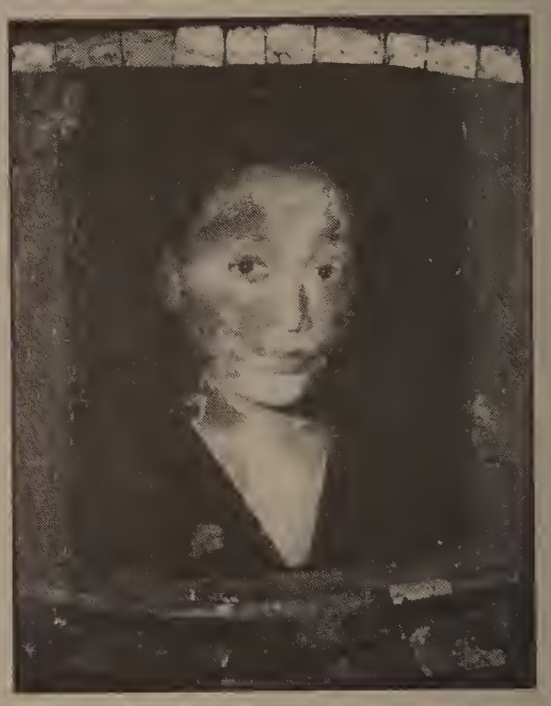
"... It's a win-win situation: a great selection of some of the best artists in the city and you make a contribution to Boston Pediatric AIDS Project..."

On the branches of trees outside Japanese temples hang thin strips of paper with prayers, poems and remembrances of deceased loved ones. Five years ago artist Tom Grabosky invited others to bring anonymous, paper pieces to the Howard Yezerski Gallery, where they would be made available for small, charitable contributions. The annual, December "Paper Prayers" has become a Boston tradition that involves many galleries and several museums. In its first four years, the event has raised $42,000 for the Boston Pediatric AIDS Project (BPAP). Organizers hope to match or top last year's $17,000.



The anonymous paper prayers — in which everyone guesses who did what and the pieces are marked at Filene's Basement prices — have been joined for the past two years by a second category, "Anything but Paper Prayers." These are signed or identified small-scale works by some of Boston's best-established, as well as emerging, artists. These pieces are available for a contribution of just $150. And, this year, the tradition gained a third element: an exhibition curated by Grabosky called "In the Spirit of Remembering," that includes major pieces by a blue-chip group of established Boston artists: Domingo Barreres, Maggi Brown, Arthur Ganson, Robert Goss, Yanik Lapur, Lynda Ray, Paul Shakespear and Elaine Spatz-Rabinowitz. A percentage of the sales will be donated to BPAP.

"There are still many choice pieces left," Yezerski said during a last-minute tour of the exhibition, which officially closes Dec. 23. Most art galleries will be closed from Dec. 24 through the New Year. But Yezerski will maintain office hours and can be reached by telephone (262-0550).

"The response has been very gratifying, both from the many artists who have donated works to all the other participating galleries (Alpha, Ashuah Irving, Kingston, Krakow, NAGA, Nielsen) and museums (Art Complex, Duxbury; Cambridge Multicultural Arts Center; Wellesly College, Mass. Art, and Newton Arts Center), " Yezerski said. "Basically it's a win-win situation. You get a great selection of affordable pieces by some of the best artists in the city and make a contribution to BPAP as well."

During the busy holiday season, galleries usually present group shows. With so many social distractions, this period is not considered the best time for one-person shows or to present emerging artists. These group shows usually take the form of the art-world equivalent of reruns or greatest hits at affordable prices.

I was refreshingly surprised to encounter the very powerful exhibition, WAKE UP put stereotypes to bed, an installation by Sam Earle in observance of World AIDS Day, as well as New Work: Peter Madden, Ron Rizzi and Esther Solondz, curated by Mary Olmsted at Gallery NAGA. The gallery is also exhibiting a wall of "Anything but Paper Prayers, of which a few pieces are still available. The gallery will be closed as of Dec. 24.

ESTHER SOLONDZ: Woman in Blue Dress, 1993.

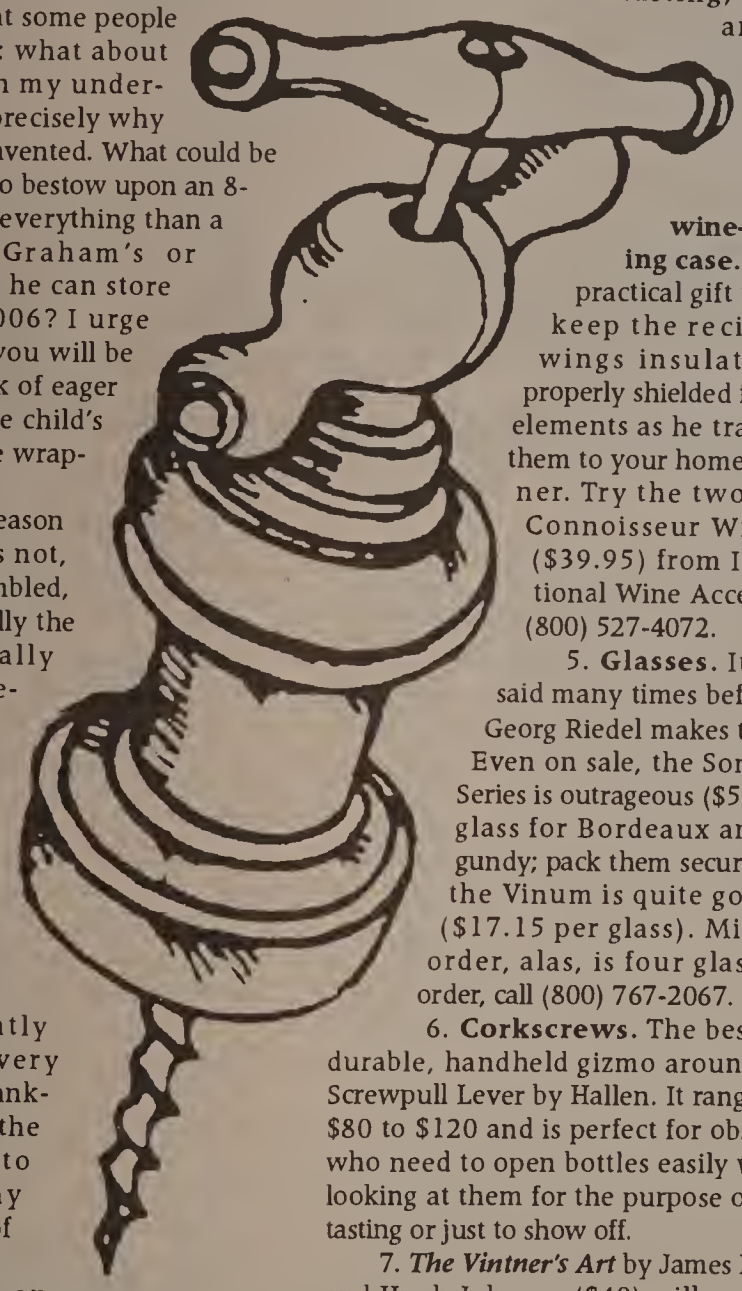
Earle's installation, recently on view at the Museum of Fine Arts, comprises 12 hanging coats, 12 handmade books and a pile of coats. Eleven of the coats and books represents groups at risk for AIDS. The extra coat and book invite interaction and comments from viewers.

The three artists in "New Work" are each showing with NAGA for the first time. Of these, Rizzi is the best known, having previously shown with two now-closed galleries, Akin and Zoe. He was recently seen in Building a Collection at the MFA, and is part of the Beyond Dreams retrospective at Bromfield Gallery, through Dec. 30. In his haunting, figurative vignettes, Rizzi, a student of Buddhism, depicts stunning fields of intense, vibrantly streaked color, offering meditations on China's hostile occupation and assimilation of Tibet. The images are variations on the flight of the Dalai Lama into India in1959.

Esther Solondz's voodoolike concoctions of mixed media and photography were one of the great critical and curatorial discoveries last year. Her work was featured at the Ashuah Irving Gallery on Congress Street, as well as at the De Cordova Museum in Lincoln. The haunting images evoke feelings of ghostlike remembrances and spirits. This work seems to be even stronger.



Much credit is due to the many artists, curators and galleries who have made generous contributions to support BPAP and other charities. ❑

The Gift of Wine

"...I give wine not, as some have grumbled, out of laziness. It is actually the most ecologically responsible of presents. Why? It's easily recycled..."

Selecting the right gift is an art that, unfortunately for those on my shopping list, I have not quite mastered. Everyone, without exception, gets wine. I know what some people may be thinking: what about the underage? In my understanding, that is precisely why vintage port was invented. What could be more appropriate to bestow upon an 8-year-old who has everything than a bottle of '85 Graham's or Delaforce, which he can store until the year 2006? I urge skeptics to try it; you will be amazed at the look of eager anticipation on the child's face as he tears the wrapping paper.

The primary reason that I give wine is not, as some have grumbled, laziness. It is actually the most ecologically responsible of presents. Why? It's easily recycled. If you are given a bottle that fails to excite your interest, why not pass it on to someone else? Be careful, though. I recently received some very tersely worded thank-you notes for all the trouble I took to repackage my remaining bottles of '91 Nouveau.

This year, in an effort to shield myself from further base ingratitude, I have struck out into uncharted waters and diversified my range of gift-giving recommendations. Some ideas do, however, presuppose that the recipient knows how to read.

1. A magazine subscription. Decanter, a British monthly that coyly describes itself as the world's best wine magazine, is full of good writing and costs $65 (Call (800) 688-6247). Also of note for its seriousness and interesting prose: The Quarterly Review of Wine ($13.95; P.O. Box 591, Winchester, Mass. 01890-9988).

2. A champagne recorker. Surprisingly, many American homes are without this staple gadget, which enables you to preserve a sparkling wine's effervescence for a day or so after celebrating. One of the nicest gold-plated pieces ($15) is available through Williams-Sonoma, (800) 541-2233.

3. The Beginner's Guide to Understanding Wine ($12.95). A great book by Michael Schuster with a deceptive title, this is not quite for beginners. Some of the most cogent and useful information about tasting, serving and storing is contained herein.

4. A wine-carrying case. Here's a practical gift that will keep the recipient's wings insulated and properly shielded from the elements as he transports them to your home for dinner. Try the two-bottle Connoisseur Wine Bag ($39.95) from International Wine Accessories, (800) 527-4072.

5. Glasses. It's been said many times before, but Georg Riedel makes the best. Even on sale, the Sommelier Series is outrageous ($55.30 per glass for Bordeaux and Burgundy; pack them securely.) but the Vinum is quite good, too ($17.15 per glass). Minimum order, alas, is four glasses. To order, call (800) 767-2067.

6. Corkscrews. The best, most durable, handheld gizmo around is the Screwpull Lever by Hallen. It ranges from $80 to $120 and is perfect for obsessives who need to open bottles easily without looking at them for the purpose of blind-tasting or just to show off.

7. The Vintner's Art by James Halliday and Hugh Johnson ($40) will answer all those nagging technical questions you have about how the stuff is made and why it tastes the way it does in a readable, easy-to-follow format.

8. A wine coaster. This is something few people think of buying, but it's very useful. Williams-Sonoma features a tastefully decorative pewter one that comes with a cork stopper ($49).

9. The Great Domaines of Burgundy by Remington Norman ($40) is specialist stuff, but it's absolutely definitive, full of inside dope on this most-fascinating district. And the pictures are good, too. A handsome volume, painstakingly researched and eminently practical for the devout Cote d'Or maniac in your life.

10. A wine-label remover. A somewhat-absurd gift, but you can probably picture who on your list would appreciate it. I sure wish I had one when I was a sommelier. Call International Wine Accessories (800) 527-4072 for the juicy details. ❑

Duck the Issue

"...Mr. Leung's entrees were all, without exception, extraordinary. The Peking duck was voted all-time best by the whole table..."

Mr. Leung is located below street level, in the block of Boylston Street, between Clarendon and Dartmouth. Passersby may not even detect its existence unless they glimpse the pole bearing the restaurant's emblem or the valet, ready to retrieve cars. The restaurant itself is furnished with a minimalistic decor of spotlights, tables covered with starched-white cloths, black-lacquer chairs and several exotic, floral displays. Mr. Leung's sleek contemporary look has a dated feel to it. However once the food arrived, we knew that the restaurant wasn't past its prime.

HONG KONG-STYLE: Bernard Leung — Mr. Leung — learned his craft at the famous David K's in Manhattan and came to Boston to work with Sally Ling, before striking out on his own in his service oriented restaurant on Boylston.

Bernard Leung — Mr. Leung — learned his craft at the famous David K's in Manhattan and came to Boston to work with Sally Ling. When he opened his own restaurant in the city more than seven years ago, his Hong Kong style of Chinese food was a new, exotic concept. The cuisine is Chinese; many of the dishes have familiar names, but the service, the preparation and presentation attempt a level rarely encountered in other Chinese restaurants. It reflects, as the name implies, the more sophisticated, urbane world of Hong Kong.

Service is an important part of the experience at Mr. Leung. Professional waitstaff, clad in tuxedos, graciously unfold napkins into patrons' laps upon seating. Glasses are miraculously refilled and dishes silently whisked away without a klink of silverware against porcelain. It is as service should be: impeccable, down to the steaming hand towel presented between each course. All without fuss.

The menu offers a variety of dishes from Southern California, along with favorites, such as Peking duck. There are also tasting dinners, including several items in each course, for two persons. Our choices for appetizers included the crispy Indonesian-curry dumplings. These crunchy triangles were filled with ground beef, marinated in curry and combined with chopped water chestnuts and bamboo shoots. We were pleasantly surprised by the taste of the Indonesian curry, and the dumplings disappeared in a heartbeat. The clams in black-bean sauce were another favorite. The tender clams were covered in a velvety black-bean sauce that was light but still fragrant with garlic and spices. Our only diappointment of the evening was minor; the filling of the pan-seared seafood dumplings was generic and bland.

The entrees were all, without exception, extraordinary. The Peking duck was voted all-time best by the whole table. The duck is served in two courses. In the first, the golden-duck skin is combined with hoisin sauce and long slices of cucumber and wrapped in a warm pancake. The staff prepares the pancakes tableside and serves them to guests. We requested extra hoisin sauce on the side. The pancakes were heaven with a wonderful crunch toevery bite. The rest of the delicious duck arrived later in the second course, thinly sliced, in a light sauce with slices of ginger, snow peas and peppers.

The ginger-and-scallion lobster was also perfect. It was dramatically arranged on a platter so as to appear to be rising from the sea, covered in seaweed (green-scallion tails). It was accompanied by a side of angel-hair pasta with fresh ginger and scallions. The lobster meat was perfectly cooked by the chef, as were all the proteins in our meal. The black-pepper filet mignon was another winner. It had been marinated and was very tender and tasty with its sauce of onions, mushrooms and black pepper.

While eating, we discovered that the owner will be opening another restaurant in March. The location will be in Amsterdam's old location in the Park Plaza building and the cusine will be a mixture of American/Continental with a variety of Asian cusines. Look for features such as a Japanese hot table, where items are cooked on a stone without oil or fat. Back to the dinner: there were several selections for dessert, but our group decided to pass and settle for a fortune cookie. If a fortune could have captured our experience, it would have been "a wonderful meal makes for a light heart." All would have enthusiastically agreed. ❑

New Year's Menus

"...Restaurants across town are offering special seatings with menus that combine the best of old and new. Bon appetit and happy 1994..."

Union Square Bistro is offering a New Year's Eve without party hats, noisemakers or higher prices. The bistro will offer its regular menu and a selection of American and French champagnes priced from $15-$40 to toast the new year. David's on Stuart Street has a special menu for the occasion. Chef Ross Cameron left a few favorites on the menu but for the most part highlights new creations. The linguine and lobster with white truffles and brandy-brown-butter sauce sound wonderful, as does the roast-lamb chop with minted couscous and grilled flatbread. A sure winner. At the top of the line, Icarus is offering two seatings for the evening. The first is from 6:30-8:30 p.m. and includes a four-course meal for $50, the other runs from 9:30 p.m. until ... and features seven courses for $85. Menu choices include roast pheasant with foie gras and pomegranates with a wild-mushroom tart and rack of veal with roasted-garlic sauce. Bon appetit and a happy New Year!

WHATS ON THE OVEN?: Daniel Bruce, executive chef at the four-star Rowes Wharf Restaurant at the Boston Harbor Hotel, demonstrates how he handles the heat in the kitchen by sitting on an antique stove at the Johnson & Wales University Culinary Archives and Museum. Chef Bruce spoke at his alma mater in his capacity as the school's 86th distinguished visiting chef.

Juicy Details

Todd English & Co. will soon take over Bel Canto on Charles Street, Beacon Hill. Look for another Figs restaurant soon. The grapevine has it that Icarus will be named one of the top-100 restaurants in the United States in a new Condé Nast survey. The owners of Roxy/Europa are considering a jazz club in the old Improv. Giacomo's, Patrick Lyons and Appetito of Newton Centre all eyed Marcella's old location at 1 Appleton St. Appetito hopes to move in before February. Michela's is leaving its current location to take over Rarities restaurant in the Charles Hotel. Goldie Hawn was sighted in Glen's Restaurant in Newburyport. It must have been that California-style food and the open kitchen. Starbuck's has scooped up two new locations in the city, one of which is the Christy's space on Charles Street. We gain a coffee place, but where do we buy the milk to put in it? Timothy Quinn, a new chef, is now performing nightly in Tosca Ristorante in Hingham. Look for Gourmet Foods to open soon at 1432 Beacon St. in Brookline. By popular demand, Pampas on Mass. Ave. in Cambridge now offers spit-roasted fish and a traditional Brazilian smoked stew called feijoada. The Broadway Deli on Tremont may soon turn Italian, courtesy of the folks that opened the new Trattoria Il Panino. Galleria Italiana is opening for dinner Wednesday-Saturday and offers risotto cooked to order. Everybody seems to be shopping for restaurant locations, can the recession/depression be over?

Wicked New Brew

Pete's Brewing Co., the people who brought you Pete's Wicked Ale and Samuel Adams' West Coast archrival, has recently introduced its Wicked Winter Brew, a raspberry-style ale with a hint of nutmeg in its flavoring. Look for it at a store near you.

Late-Night Dining

Boston has never really been a late-night city, but advances are being made every day. Two of the newest players in the dark world of late-late night dining are Roberta's Show-Biz Cafe at the Charles Playhouse and Champions Sports Bar in the Marriott. Roberta's opened a month ago with a dark-green interior and walls lined with caricatures of the stars. Hoping to become the Sardi's of Boston, it offers between 6 p.m.-2 a.m. a full menu and drinks to the theater crowd. Scott Olsen performs nightly, but look for torch-and-lounge singers very soon. You may catch a glimpse of some of the cast members from the shows playing in town. Champions has been around for a while, but starting in mid-January will serve the full menu and a new breakfast menu until 3:30 a.m. on Friday and Saturday nights. There will be an opening bash on Jan. 14 to kickoff the new menus, from 12-4 a.m. with a complementary breakfast buffet. No cover or attitude. Who says there's no life in Boston after midnight? ❑

IRRESOLUTIONS

"...It's time to make promises to yourself that you know you will never keep and set yourself up for the crushing disappointment that inevitably results every New Year's Eve..."

New Year's Eve has got to be one of the single-most anticlimactic events in the history of the world. Every year you hopefully hype it up, expecting that with the arrival of a new cycle of 365 days will come something new and wonderful, like a Cindy Crawford figure, instant fame and adoration from millions, the lottery jackpot, or the realization of every sexual fantasy you've ever had.

Get a grip. When you start off the New Year slumped promisingly over the rim of a toilet, it's true that things probably couldn't get worse, but they're probably not going to get that much better, either. For instance, while I did eventually (well into the new year) recover from my hangover, I did not fulfill my resolutions to become Queen of the Universe or discover a better use for fruitcake. The status quo was pretty much maintained for another 365, while I assured myself that next year, things were really going to change.

And now, here it is again, time to make promises to yourself that you know you will never keep and set yourself up for the crushing disappointment that inevitably results every New Year's Eve, when you don't have nearly as much fun as you think you were supposed to. New Year's Eve is supposed to be picture-perfect: you and a stunningly attractive date dressed to the nines at some incredibly outrageous and debauched party, guzzling champagne and tossing your empty glasses over the balcony onto the roof of your stretch limo waiting below to take you to your next, wild destination. The night unfolds before you in a glittering scenario, where you will continue to have uninterrupted, wall-to-wall, this-is-the-best-time-ever FUN.

Hah. It hardly ever happens. What usually does happen goes something like this: You get out of the crummy taxi, which was unquestionably driven by a lunatic who feels about New Year's the way Scrooge felt about Christmas before Marley showed up — only to discover that you sat on something on the seat of the taxi and now your way-too-expensive dress has a splotch right on your derriere. You go into the party knowing that you'll feel better if you can just get some of that champagne in you. Immediately inside, your date disappears, only to reappear an hour after the countdown, so drunk that he/she doesn't remember his own name. Everywhere around you things are starting to come unhinged; your hostess is crying because she has a run in her pantyhose and no one ate her hors d'oeuvres, your vision is doubling in a most inconvenient manner, and the guy/girl that you really wish you were with at this moronic fete disappears into the bathroom with some bimbo. It's a nightmare that seems to occur, in some version or other, to almost everyone, every year.

Let's face it: What did you do last New Year's? If you can remember, I'll bet it wasn't that great. And if you can't remember, then it was probably even worse than that.

Well, that's it. This year, I'm going to enjoy it. I don't even know what I'm going to do yet, but I have ascertained, through scrupulous research and on-the-spot interviews, what I'm not going to do, and I'll share these rules with you in the hopes that you will have a more enjoyable and less disappointing New Year's Eve.

1) Do not buy one those package deals that includes accommodations at a Holiday Inn and "champagne toast." Drinking one, measly free glass of cheap Freixenet with suburban celebrants does not constitute a worthwhile evening.

2) Do not count on getting through the entire evening with your significant other without fighting. Undoubtedly, one of you will recall that it wasn't his/her idea to come to this stupid party and it's all downhill from there.

3) Do not spend more than an hour at a party without identifying the locations of all exits and bathrooms in case you need to make a speedy retreat to and/or deposit in the porcelain bank.

4) Do not give in to your urge to make a clean slate and tell your date that you've slept with at least two other people at this party. He or she is bound to be less than grateful for your honesty and candor at this particular moment.

5) Do not fool yourself into thinking that you never get sick from shots of Jaegermeister.

6) And, perhaps most important, do not worry about the fact that you will be starting the New Year in a condition similar to that of road kill — you'll have plenty of company in your misery. So relax, have fun, and save those resolutions for next year. ❑

BAR & CLUB LISTINGS

The following is a list of advertisers, plus some of the most popular nighttime establishments in the city. Please check times and prices in advance. If you'd like to have your bar or club listed, please call the Improper Bostonian Advertising Dept. at 232-3507.

BREWERIES

COMMONWEALTH BREWING COMPANY
138 Portland St., Boston, 523-8383.
"Let no man thirst for lack of real ale," is the motto at this micro-brewery and restaurant featuring glass walls so thirsty patrons can longingly observe the brewing process. The decor consists of copper tables, pipes and beer tanks. Approximately 10 English ales are served on tap as well as Boston Burton Ale served frosty cold in the bottle. Close proximity to the Boston Garden translates to before and after game crowds. Live reggae and calypso every Friday and Saturday night 9:30 p.m. to 1 a.m. Brewery tours are free, but sorry, this isn't the Molson factory. No samples. $3 cover, and if you have dinner here, cover is waived.

DANCING

AVENUE C
5 Boylston Place, Boston, 423-3832.
A chichi dance club located in the Theatre District across from the Common. Inside you'll find a mix of young professionals who arrive to meet, mix, mate, or dance up a storm. ODE TO ZAPPA

"...Far beyond a 'rock' musician, Frank Zappa predated and outshined jazz fusion with the intricacies of his music..."

IN MEMORIAM: Dead at 52, composer and musician Frank Zappa's underappreciated career included audacious satire and sophisticated artistry.

When Frank Zappa recently died at the age of 52 after a long battle with prostate cancer, the requisite eulogies came rolling in. He was credited for humorous tunes such as his hit "Valley Girl," which spoofed that Southern California mentality. He was recognized for debating Tipper Gore and the PMRC (Parents Music Resource Council) on the issue of censoring records. He was termed a maverick of social satire.

Yes, Zappa believed that humor belonged in music. But most of the posthumous tributes that briefly flashed on the news failed to grasp the magnitude of Zappa's accomplishments.

What about his skills as a composer? Far beyond a "rock" musician, Zappa predated and outshined jazz fusion with the intricacies of his music, which he recorded with bands featuring such prodigies as guitarists Adrian Belew and Steve Vai, violinist Jean-Luc Ponty and drummers Aynsley Dunbar, Terry Bozzio and Chad Wackerman. Zappa himself was a formidable guitarist, whose solos revealed staggering melodic-and-rhythmic complexity.

In recent years, frustrated that his compositions were too difficult for humans to play, Zappa immersed himself in the advanced Synclavier synthesizer — and put down the guitar altogether. When he found an ensemble to play those transcriptions, it was the leading European 20th-century group Ensemble Modern, heard on Zappa's latest release, The Yellow Shark. The association stemmed from what may be the greatest testament to Zappa's genius. In 1992, he was chosen as one of four featured composers at Germany's Frankfurt Festival, holding company with Karlheinz Stockhausen of Germany, Alexander Knaifel of Russia and the late John Cage of the United States.

From audacious satire to sophisticated artistry, Zappa was uncompromising. He skewered the hippie movement on Freak Out!, his 1966 debut with the Mothers of Invention. In 1967, he took on the sacred Beatles with We're Only in It for the Money, appearing in a dress on the cover's mock imitation of the Sgt. Pepper's album. Zappa's music of that era was both far-out and sobering, a mix of pyschedelic madness, playful do-wop and classical discipline.

Zappa's attraction to absurdity continued through '70s associations with Captain Beefheart and Flo & Eddie, the latter contributing to his reputation for bathroom humor. But Zappa's wit was often as topical as it was tart. More recently, he targeted the Republican right in his "Jesus Thinks You're a Jerk," heard on Broadway the Hard Way, a live album from Zappa's last tour in 1988.

On that tour, which included two nights at Boston's Orpheum Theater (with voter-registration tables in the lobby), Zappa's band also turned things upside-down musically, from his own classics to a cover of "Stairway to Heaven" (with horn arrangement in place of the guitar solo). For examples of such prowess, tap into The Greatest Band You Never Heard, or the first five of six double-CD volumes of You Can't Do That on Stage Anymore (the sixth focuses on the funny stuff). Of Zappa's 60-odd albums, four all-instrumental releases showcase his guitar playing. They all scratch the surface for a guy whose vaults contained tapes of virtually every concert and interview he ever did.

On the one occasion I interviewed Zappa, he began by stating "You have 15 minutes, and not a second more" — a typical comment from the time-conscious workaholic. Perhaps Zappa knew his time would be short on Earth. On Freak Out!, he quoted hero Edgar Varese: "The present-day composer refuses to die." Over the past few years, Zappa did his best to stand up to the Grim Reaper, the same as he did any other social or musical convention.

Elsewhere — One of the many bands influenced by Zappa is Vermont's Phish, which plays its annual New Year's show at a sold-out Centrum, while Aerosmith holds court at the Boston Garden for the first of two sold-out nights. Other New Year's attractions include mutant-blues-pop trio Morphine at the Middle East, ska-band Bim Skala Bim at the Beanpot and vocal-jazz group New York Voices at Scullers. ❑

Making Waves

"...In Boston, radio serves as a first-class introduction to an art form that's otherwise deplorably expensive to explore..."

The air has been cluttered with Valkyries since the dawn of radio. In the '30s and '40s, the American Tobacco Co. and Texaco arranged for weekly commercial broadcasts from the Metropolitan Opera House in New York; since then, busty German women have, without interruption, soared like bloated clouds across the airwaves. They arrive in our living rooms, sizzling with the heat of reentry. And classical radio is still going strong. Many listeners who wouldn't buy a classical CD enjoy classical music on the radio, especially in Boston, where so many excellent stations compete for attention.

Perhaps the most famous local radio personality involved is Robert J. Lurtsema, whose show Morning pro musica on WGBH (89.7 FM,96.3 FM in the Back Bay) has become a byword for clever programming, wide-ranging repertoire, and pauses so pregnant they demand C-section. Now that Lurtsema has cut back Morning pro musica to weekends (Saturdays and Sundays at 7 a.m.), WGBH has worked up a crop of new shows to replace it. On weekday mornings, Doug Briscoe's Classical Morning replaces Lurtsema's Hitchcockian early birds.

ROBERT J. LURTSEMA: Host, WGBH's* Morning pro musica.

Whereas Lurtsema tended to start the morning with smaller-scale, often-baroque works, and perhaps muster up a Brahms symphony after a few cups of coffee, Briscoe leans toward later music. This is a mixed blessing, needless to say. While romantic and postromantic music is very popular with the average listener, Richard Strauss at 8:30 may strike you like cold pizza and layer cake for breakfast.

Richard Knisely, whose superb Off the Record used to follow Lurtsema's show, has now been granted a two-hour spot called Boston Performances (11 a.m.-1 p.m.). This promises to be one of the strongest classical shows on the air. The show emphasizes local and live performances, so it has a real edge that's often lacking in classical programming. Knisely arranges live studio performances at least twice a week, presenting a gratifyingly wide range of music. Not only are the artists by turns venerable and unusual, Knisely himself is as amiable and informative a host as one could hope for. Among the commercial giants of the air, WCRB (102.5 FM) looms large. WCRB inherits the mantle of those early Texaco-Met performances — in fact, some of the first commercial breaks broadcast over the air interrupted great opera. The daytime programming is pleasant, although frequent commercial interruptions wear (unless one's playing it softly in the background). WCRB's programming has more depth than, say, WBACH (104.9 FM), which exuberantly declares itself light-classical music, but WCRB's commercial format demands that daytime announcers limit themselves to short works. WCRB's real gems are the "World Symphony" presentations, which carry on what can — without sarcasm — be called the finest tradition of commercial sponsorship of the arts. This series, airing at 9 p.m. on weeknights, 8 p.m. on Saturdays, and 2:30 p.m. on Sundays, brings listeners concerts by the finest orchestras in America — among them St. Louis, Chicago and (on Saturday) our own Boston Symphony Orchestra. The selections are strong, usually interspersing well-known romantic pieces with 20th-century works, and the radio comment is brief and informative. There can be no better introduction to the symphonic world.

Similarly, WCRB's broadcasts from the Metropolitan Opera House, which typically begin at 1:30 on Saturdays, shunt passion and tragedy right into your living room without the slightest expense or hassle. For many families, Saturday-afternoon opera has become the tradition of a half-century; it just isn't a Saturday without big Italians hurling themselves off rooftops while you hose down the car. As long as the Met continues to draw big names and big vibratos onto its pricey stage, Bostonians will thank WCRB for making it easy to listen in.One final local radio institution remains to be mentioned — Harvard's orgies. Not, in fact, games of nude Twister with greasy freshmen sobbing about their grade-point averages between cries of coition, WHRB's (95.3 FM) orgies are completely wonderful-and-obsessive music marathons, each exhausting with an urgency almost epicurean the works of a selected composer. For a night and a day, WHRB will bombard you with Chopin's juvenilia or Gesualdo's manic madrigals. They're witty and insane. For information, call 495-4818.

Radio continues to be one of the prime venues for classical music, as it has been since the first time we realized that the opera isn't over till the fat lady sells you radial tires. ❑

SPECIAL EVENTS

CASTLE ANTIQUE SHOW
Park Plaza Castle
Arlington Street at Columbus Ave., Boston
(508) 744-2731
In the alternative-to-football vein of New Year's Day activities, this antique show heads the list. For a mere $4 (free for children) you can shop, shop, shop as 60 dealers from six states tempt you with their wares. Open from 12-6 p.m. Food will be available. Free parking, too!

BOSTON SEAFARER'S HOLIDAY
sails out from The Landing on William J. Day Blvd., South Boston
523-8386
If you don't feel too hung-over from your New Year's Eve, consider cruising to Thompson Island with the Friends of Boston Harbor. Their boat, the Pilgrim IV is making three trips to and from the island — the earliest leaves at noon, and the latest leaves at 1:15 p.m. Visitors can spend the next four hours wandering around, or even cross-country skiing, if weather permits. Dress warmly (although there will be a place to warm up on the island), bring a camera and a picnic lunch. Tickets , $10, $9 for senior citizens, and $6 for children 4-12, are available in advance by sending a check and SASE to FBHI, P.O. Box 9025, Boston, MA 02114. Some tickets may be available by the dockside, but advance reservations are highly recommended.

A CHRISTMAS CELTIC SOJOURN
WGBH Radio
(89.7 FM, or 96.3 FM in the Back Bay)
If you're not running yourself ragged today getting last-minute presents, why not spend the evening at home with the radio (yes, radio!) on. Host Brian O'Donovan explores Celtic traditions on Dec. 24 from 7-8 p.m. Highlights include performances by the Chieftains, and excerpts from A Child's Christmas in Wales, read by Dylan Thomas himself (although, of course, not live).

MASSACHUSETTS COALITION FOR THE HOMELESS
Upper Rotunda, Faneuil Hall, Boston
737-3508
If the season to be jolly has you in a mad frenzy, here's an oasis of relief: Volunteers from MCH will be wrapping your gifts for you through Dec. 24, at Faneuil Hall. In return for your donation, you can leave your gift-wrapping tedium to the experts, 10 a.m.-9 p.m.

PHILADELPHIA PREMIERE BENEFIT
The Charles Hotel
Corner of Eliot and Bennett Streets., Harvard Square
351-0165
On Jan. 10, at 7 p.m., the New England premiere of Jonathan Demme's new movie, Philadelphia, will be accompanied by a real New York-style party to benefit the Harvard AIDS Institute. It all gets underway at the Charles Hotel, following the screening at the Harvard Square Loews. Tickets are $50-$150, and are available by phone. Consider yourself lucky — in New York, the tickets ran up to $2,500.

TRAINS, TRAINS, TRAINS!
South Station, Boston,
451-2266
Chugging through South Station's Grand Concourse from Dec. 4 to Jan. 8 is a model-train exhibit. At 16-foot-by-24-foot, it is the largest indoor-garden railway display exhibit in New England. Open daily from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Free.

WINTER WONDERLAND
Boston Common, Boston
1(800) 8-WONDER
If you happen to be in the downtown area, why not take a stroll through Winter Wonderland on the Boston Common? Until the day after Christmas, the Common will be transformed into a holiday paradise, with a petting zoo, sleigh rides, gingerbread houses and even Frosty himself on hand! Open Monday-Saturday, 11 a.m.-7 p.m., and Sunday, noon-7 p.m. Tickets are $4 for children 4-12 and senior citizens, and $6 for adults. Children under 4 get in free.

How To Write A Classified Ad That Sells

- Decide on classification of Ad.
- Begin your ad with what you're trying to sell.
- Be descriptive. List all the standard features of your item first.
- State the terms of the sale: the price, whether you're "flexible or negotiable."
- Include phone number and times to call.

INFORMATION AND PRICES

RATES: Line ads: six lines long: one issue - $24; four issues - $67; eight issues - $120; twelve issues - $200. Additional lines - $7 per. Bold heading - $5. Classified display - $20 per column inch. For frequency discounts, call for prices.

REGULATIONS: All ad copy is subject to approval before publication. Any Ad deemed obscene will be either edited or removed. The Improper Bostonian shall be under no liability for failure to insert an advertisement. Any errors that do not affect the material value of the Ad will not be credited. Errors must be reported within the first week of publication. All ads must be prepaid.

CIRCULATION: The Improper Bostonian reaches over 190,000 people every two weeks, making it the largest bi-weekly newspaper in the Boston area. The newspaper is available at newsstands, schools, hotels, entertainment oriented businesses, on Boston neighborhoods and by subscription.

AGENCY DISCOUNTS: 15%. Call for more information.

ROCKIE HOROSCOPE

©1993

BY ROCKIE GARDINER

DEC. 22,1993 - JAN. 18, 1994

GENERAL FORECAST:

A feeling of family solidarity, the sight of familiar faces and traditional holiday fare, plus a rare sense of security will kaep us cozy this waek, but not truly content. Wa'll be OK with ourselves, quite amicable to each other until Sunday, which is when the sun and aggressive Mars meet in ambitious Capricorn. That's an appropriate aspect for Boxing Day and the bone-breakingbattle for a wild-card spot. (Hope for her Raiders still springs in this breast!) Christmas Day itself may be a little weird. A sensuous Taurus moon goes void, of course at 10:39 a.m., so no presents given or received aftar then will have quite the impact you intended. Better exchange yours on Christmas Eve when Mercury conjuncts Venus and marries the gift of gab with the gift of love. You'll be clever and charming and utterly communicative. Save the sex for Sunday when Mars is heavily charged and the whole world is horny. Just know that everybody's vulnerable during the Cancer-Capricorn, Mommy-Daddy full-moon period, which runs for two days bafore, two days after it is exact. Tuesday at 3:05 p.m. No eclipse this time, kids, just wretched emotional excess.

ARIES (MARCH 20—APRIL 19)

In tha midst of holiday cheer and hangovers, comes the most important planetary aspect affecting your career in two years: the conjunction of your Mars ruler and the all-powerful sun in your Capricorn midheaven. What to do? Take the initiativa, crash through the glass ceiling or simply let the establishment knock on your door? Confidence is no problem, neither is energy. Becausa Mars works best and is most effective in the sign of the Goat, you can be sure that your efforts will not be for naught..

TAURUS (APRIL 20—MAY 20)

Steady as she goes. Staying on track, following a self-appointed leader is the best way for you to get through the holiday. Not that you're in any physical danger, but thara is a good chance you'll spaak words of love on Christmas Eva; declare your intentions way too soon when, in reality (which dascends like a brick on Sunday afternoon) you're simply caught up in the spirit of the season. Hugs and kisses are OK, rings and things are iffy. But if you feel advanturous, go ahead; you can always reneg later.

GEMINI (MAY 21—JUNE 20)

Full heart, full moon, full arms. Are we talking tattoos, bracelets, packages or romance? Because your Mercury ruler is wrappad in the loving vibes of Venus, you could be in rapture befora the week is over. You'll attract all sorts of literata folks and look especially attractiva, too. Parents will be pleased as punch with their offspring (instead of hitting them over the haad like Punch?), and entartainers and gamblers, the risk-takers in the crowd,will have better luck than usual.

CANCER (JUNE 21—JULY 22)

Tha word regarding work is excellent, particularly if it comes from an attractive collaague. Giving service, serving aces, sinking freethrows, cleaning the sink; day by day stuff is really appraciated when you're doing your "thing" so baautifully. And because the moon is full in your sign, everybody will be watching. Crabs with lots of Lao will adore tha spotlight, hermit Crabs will just have to suffer through it. This year there's no hiding from significant others, especially thosa with a "purpose."

LEO (JULY 23—AUG. 22)

Planning to sing, dance and gambol/gamble your way through Christmas? Almost all the planetary action takes place in your solar fifth house, the one where risky thrills lurk, where the glitz and fun comes from. So if a romantic notion pops up when you least expect it, if you feel particulary creative, courageous or combative, blame it on faisty Mars pushing you furthar, faster. Natural-born teachers and entertainers will amaze us with their audacity and the universal appeal of their ideas.

VIRGO (AUG. 23—SEPT. 22)

Keep the home fires burning this weekend. The most interesting events occur on your floor, in your kitchen, so don't get lured to another site unless you have work to do. Even that won't be too bad because you can earn major brownie points, maybe even fall in love on the job. Just make sure you drag the object of your desire back to your cave and, if need be, throw him or her into the bosom of your family. There's an odd romantic quality to this holiday that's best experianced on familiar ground.

LIBRA (SEPT. 23—OCT. 22)

Tha waight, routine or restraint you sometimes feel when contemplating your relationship to a loved one works to your advantage this week. Conveniently in tima for Christmas! No resentment, no anxiety, just a heightened sense of security and a deap-down warmth. Take advantage of the supportive connection between your Venus ruler and stable Saturn because we both know these aspects don't last. Venus also makes you mora vocal, more than willing to express yourself when it merges with Mercury on Xmas Eve. Caroling or confessing?

SCORPIO (OCT. 23—NOV. 21)

More money, more stuff. Maybe a philosophical discussion of the value of whatever/whoever you presently charish, or is that covet? And a graater determination to get what you want, even if that simply comes down to raspectability or parental approval. When your Mars co-ruler meets the sun in Capricorn — a rare enough occurence, you apply your passion, your enormous energy to a legitimate, tima-honored cliche, such as, "Nothing succeeds lika success."

SAGITTARIUS (NOV. 22—DEC. 21)

Happy birthday to the travelers, teachers and translators of the zodiac. Thank our lucky stars the new moon highlights a purely personal agenda, our solar first house, because there's little reason for anyone to pay us any attantion at all this week. And since our Jupiter ruler is lurking in the reclusive 12th house, we'll probably opt for a very quiet, practically nonexistent birthday celebration this year. Well, maybe you'll get all fired up when Mars conjuncts your natal sun, but me, I'll get a fever.

CAPRICORN (DEC. 22—JAN. 20)

You have until Sunday, which is when Mercury and Venus leave Sag, to present your case, to make your wish for Chnstmas peace on your turf come true. Saying what you mean and meaning what you say is easy, perhaps even an inspiration to an impressionable Libra or a Virgin who has dropped his or her guard in the seasonal spirit of brotherly love. This is a good time to think about New Year's resolutions, the easy ones you can keep, the creatively challenging ones you should.

AQUARIUS (JAN. 21—FEB. 18)

Moral support from the usual sources plus more support from the power behind the throne (your guardian angel?) this week. Easy aspects to your Saturn ruler can bring in bucks, not just presents for your birthday and/or Xmas. The major event, however, takes place on Boxing Day when the sun and Mars combine to give you a shot of energyand ambition you haven't felt in years. Just make sure that, in your rush to succeed, you don't hurt someone who really cares about you.

PISCES (FEB. 19—MARCH 19)

Continued success with the establishment, the straight, industrious types who rule somebody's roost. And yes, plenty of cock, too, when horny Mars meets the sun on Sunday. While the holiday may not be all about good will toward men, there's enough macho posturing to affect a single-minded, non-sexist fish. Except for the overpowering smell of Old Spice, the rest of the week can be quite sweet, and sometime next Thursday fairly ennching. Doing year-end stock and bond transactions?
